Son Of American Woman Who Financed Restoration Of Grecian King Is Here Ill

William B. Leeds, Jr., Once Called "Richest Baby In World," In Sanitarium With Injury He Received While Tiger Hunting In Sumatra

William B. Leeds Jr., who is in Shanghai under medical treatment while awaiting a steamer to take him back to America, is a son of Princess Christopher of Greece, formerly Mrs. William B. Leeds, who lately has played a leading part in the affairs of Greece, for she supplied the finances to restore Constantine to the Grecian throne.

Mr. Leeds, now a youth of 17, was at one time the subject of much writing in American newspapers and publications which gave the name of 'the richest baby in the world.' His father was one of America's great industrial leaders and was closely identified with the vast development that took place in the United States in steel making. The fortune that he left when he died was one of the most princely in America.

ON TIGER HUNT

William B. Leeds Jr. came to the Orient early last fall for a tiger hunt in Sumatra. It was while he was in the back country jungles of Sumatra that he was bitten on the right arm by an insect with the result that the bone became infected. The injury proved far more serious than was at first expected and after Mr. Leeds failed to obtain relief from physicians in the south he came on to Shanghai. Since his arrival here this week ago he has been a patient at Dr. J. B. Fearn's sanitarium under the care of Dr. Paul Martin.

It has been decided that Mr. Leeds' arm is to be saved only through a difficult and delicate operation and this will be performed in New York upon his arrival there. He is to sail on the first steamer leaving, probably the Nile of the China Mail which is to sail on January 29.

RELATIVES HERE

Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Green, who are Mr. Leeds' uncle and aunt are now in Peking with their daughter. They are due to arrive here on Tuesday and will sail on the same boat with Mr. Leeds who is to be under the care of Miss Freda Schultz, a nurse of the staff at Doctor Fearn's sanitarium.

On his arrival from the south Mr. Leeds brought with him two monkeys from the Sumatran jungles and these have been made the pets of many of the patients at the sanitarium. While Mr. Leeds' infected arm is the source of no little pain and annoyance and requires frequent and careful treatment, the patient has not been confined to his bed, but has been able to make almost daily excursions about the city by motor car. An attendant who is accompanying Mr. Leeds is at the Astor House.

MOTHER IS FAMOUS

The young man's mother—now the Princess Christopher—long has been famed in social life both in America and on the European continent for her beauty and for her vast wealth. She was one of America's foremost women war workers and in this she was assisted by the son who is now here. She founded and conducted personally one of the largest hospitals in Paris while the war was in progress.

Cable messages have been sent from Shanghai to Athens to the Princess Christopher apprising her of her son's misfortune and it is understood here that she plans to leave Greece for America and will arrive at New York in time to meet him there.

OVATION IN ATHENS

On the occasion when Princess Christopher went to Athens just after the restoration of King Constantine had become an accomplished fact she was given an enthusiastic reception by the Grecian populace, for her charm and wealth and the liberality with which she financed Constantine's cause made a striking appeal to Greek imagination. Her arrival at Athens, in fact, for the moment overshadowed the then expected advent of Constantine.

This was early in December. Princess Christopher and her party came from Venice by passenger steamer and were trans-shipped to a Greek destroyer off Patras. On this destroyer were the Princess Andrew and Mr. Rhallis Jr., Greek Minister of Marine. At Priaeus the arrivals were welcomed by the Queen Mother Olga, who was also Regent, and a ministerial deputation.

The Princess Christopher, on setting foot on the soil of the land of her adoption, was tenderly embraced by the Queen Mother. Unfortunately the destroyer was late in getting into Athens and night had fallen to the vast disappointment of the great crowds that had waited hopefully through the day to see and give welcome to "the Dollar Princess," as she already is called familiarly in Athens.

At the close of his speech, Mr. Tsing presented Mr. Gulland with a massive silver loving cup, appropriately engraved. PROFITEERS FLEE VIENNA AS MOB BRINGS GALLOWS

Austrian People Disappointed Over Failure To Get British Loan

MAY CUT LONDON WAGES

Reduction Of Prices Is Basis Of National Reorganisation Move

(Reuter's Service)

Vienna, Jan. 21.—The resignation of the Austrian Cabinet, and the general strike, which were foreshadowed for the 15th and 20th inst., respectively, have not yet materialised.

Intense disappointment is expressed at Great Britain's inability to grant a loan, and popular demonstrations against profiteers are taking place at intervals. On one of these occasions a gallows for profiteers was carried through the city. Apprehensive profiteers are fleeing in panic.

EXTENSION GRANTED

Meanwhile the workers have granted the Cabinet an extension of time, the period of which is not stipulated, to reduce prices. The result is to suspend a sword of Damocles over the heads of the Cabinet, as the Opposition decline to take over the Government.

London, Jan. 21.—The possibility of profiting by the reduction in prices to secure a permanent reduction in wages is being extensively exploited. The Government is still concentrating on the economic situation, on the lines of the rectification of exchanges, the development of a system of barter, the speeding up of public schemes, and the extension of short-time.

PLANS FOR REMEDY

The Unemployment Committee established at the recent joint trade union and Labor conference has submitted its proposals. These include a universal 44 hour week; State unemployment benefit at the rate of £2 weekly to married men, and 25s. for single men, with additional allowances for children; the total rejection of the Government's short-time proposals; the increase of the school-going age to 16; an extensive scheme of public works; a system of international credits, and the resumption of commerce with Russia and Central Europe.

LIFT INJUNCTION AGAINST USE OF SOUTHERN FUNDS

Order Restraining Wu Ting-fang's Control Of $2,600,000 Is Cancelled

COURT GRANTS APPEAL

Maintains Attitude Of Not Considering Political Issues In Matter

The injunction restraining Dr. Wu Ting-fang from making any disposition of the sum of $2,600,000 held by him for the Southern Constitutionalists which was granted by the Mixed Court last April was cancelled by Assessor Blackburn and Magistrate Li yesterday.

The injunction, it will be recalled, was granted at the instance of Chang Shih-chao, who claimed the money for the Southern Military Government. The court would make no ruling on his claim owing to the political interests involved and its ruling in the present action included a refusal to deal with any political issues.

The dissolution of the injunction came following application made on behalf of Dr. Wu by Mr. Reader Harris and Mr. Sterling Fessenden.

The Court's judgment was as follows:

APPLICATION NOT OPPOSED

"This is an application by the defendant for an order that the action brought against him by the plaintiff be dismissed and the injunction granted on April 27 be dissolved, upon the grounds set out in the application.

"The application is not opposed.

"This Court still adheres to the attitude which it has maintained throughout these proceedings, namely, an absolute refusal to deal with any of the political issues involved and, therefore, the only part of the application to which it is prepared to direct its attention is paragraph 6, which alleges in effect that the defendant has since November 29 been in Canton.

"In making the order of June 2, which superseded that of April 17, we stated that our object in making it was to prevent the abuse of the sanctuary afforded by this Foreign Settlement, and we added . . . . 'until such time as this suit is withdrawn or compromised or—better still—until Dr. Wu Ting-fang by leaving the shelter of this Foreign Settlement, withdraws himself from the jurisdiction of this Court, the present injunction must be continued.'

NO REASON FOR INJUNCTION

"It was stated at the hearing of this application, and is matter of common knowledge, that Dr. Wu Ting-fang is not now in the Settlement and, this being so, the reason for the injunction made against him has ceased to exist and we cannot longer continue it without that direct interference in Chinese political affairs which we have all along tried to avoid.

"We, therefore, grant the present application, dismiss the action and cancel the order made by us on June 2, 1920."

Sinn Feiners In Ambush Slay Six Police Officers

(Reuter's Service)

London, Jan. 21.—Details of the ambush at Glenwood, Co. Clare, in which six police were killed, show that a patrol of ten police was waylaid at a spot where the road skirted a wood. The numerous assailants posted in the wood, whence they commanded a clear view, poured a concentrated fusilade into the approaching lorry.

The police replied with bravery, but an inspector and five men were killed early in the encounter. The remaining four continued the fight. Two of them were soon wounded, but the two others escaped uninjured.

NO ARRESTS MADE

Strong parties of police and military subsequently searched the countryside fruitlessly, and no arrests were effected.

New York, Jan. 21.—The President has ordered the deportation of Mr. O'Callaghan, the Lord Mayor of Cork. In the meantime he is being permitted to address meetings and testify before the Irish Investigation Committee.

London, Jan. 21.—A party of a dozen ambushers apparently watching for "Black and Tans" from Germanstown, the training center for Royal Irish Constabulary in North Dublin, were surprised by cadets at Tulka Bridge near Dublin this morning.

CADETS ESCAPE HARM

One of the ambushers was seriously wounded and six were taken prisoner.

The authorities at Dublin on learning of the ambush had rushed off the cadets in motor cars and the ambushers, who were provided with bombs, bolted after a rapid exchange of shots.

The cadets sustained no casualties.

Melbourne, January 21.—Mr. Osmond Esmande has booked his return passage.

London, Jan. 21.—Five alleged Sinn Feiners were brought up at the South Western District Police Court today in connection with the recent attempt to set fire to 60,000 barrels of oil stored at the Vacuum Oil Company's premises at Wandsworth. One man was bound over and the others remanded for a week.

BRIAND CABINET IS GIVEN VOTE OF CONFIDENCE

Huge Majority Favors New Administration's Outline Of Policy

PREMIER IS CHEERED

Working Classes Depended On For Big Share Of Rehabilitation

(Reuter's Service)

Paris, Jan. 21.—Following the debate on the Ministerial Declaration, the Chamber this evening passed a vote of confidence in the Briand Government by 475 votes to 68.

Paris, Jan. 21.—The Briand Cabinet made its bow in the Chamber yesterday. It was a great Parliamentary occasion. Benches and galleries were packed to the breaking-point.

M. Aristide Briand, with his fine voice, read the Ministerial declaration of policy slowly and gravely. The whole Chamber listened attentively, but it was some time before there was any expression of assent or dissent.

It was the assertion of the Government's determination to secure the execution of the Peace Treaty which evoked the first cries of "Bravo," which were repeated when the Premier drew the contrast between Germany, "defeated but prospercus," and France, "victorious but in difficulties."

AUDIENCE SYMPATHETIC

The Premier's remarks as to the necessity for an ever-increasing cordiality between France and England were greeted with cries of "Very good" from numerous deputies, and his subsequent outline of the policy which the new Cabinet intended to pursue as regards Italy, America, Belgium and Russia were also favorably received.

The Government's policy towards the Soviets; the references to the reduction of domestic expenditure; the freedom of commerce and industry, and the rapid restoration of the liberated territories; together with the decisions as to the provision to be made for the widows and orphans of men killed in the war—all elicited further cheering.

LEANS ON WORKERS

The confidence which the Premier expressed in the working classes was especially welcomed by the members of the Left. M. Briand said that the workers formed the majority on whom he intended to rely for support.

A thunder of cheers greeted the Premier as he stepped down from the tribune.

Paris, Jan. 21.—The Ministerial declaration was read in the Senate by M. Marraud, Minister of the Interior, M. Bonnevoy, Minister of Justice, being unable to read the document on account of the eye trouble from which he is suffering. M. Marraud was loudly applauded.

London, Jan. 21.—It is authoritatively stated that there is reason to believe that the Germans will agree to pay three annual instalments of reparations, following the decisions reached at the Spa and Boulogne Conferences.

PRESS IS FIRM

Paris, Jan. 21.—French newspapers continue to urge the adoption of a strong attitude towards Germany.

Commenting on the German semi-official report of an interview between M. Briand and the German Ambassador, the Petit Journal, for example, says: "While France is prepared at present to demand only part payment of her debt, and even contemplates the possibility of the relinquishment of a portion of it, Germany threatens to break off the conversations, failing fresh concessions, entailing the revision of the most essential clauses of the Peace Treaty. Germany's attitude renders the hope of avoidance of a resort to force very unlikely"

CALL MERE FORMALITY

(French Wireless through Reuter)

Paris, January 21.—Referring to M. Briand's call on Herr Mayer, the German Ambassador, the Journal des Debats understands that this was merely the Premier's customary formal call on assumption of office, and not a diplomatic interview, as reported in a semi-official Berlin despatch, which alleged that M. Briand and Herr Mayer had discussed the question of reparations on the occasion.

Life Imprisonment Given Henry Furbush, Sailor, Who Killed R. F. Hazelton

Military Commissioner Asked To Keep 'The Trenches' Closed

HEARTILY commending the action of the Shanghai Defense Commissioner in ordering the closing of the barrooms of "The Trenches," twenty-three prominent foreign and Chinese residents of the Settlements and Chapei, have sent a letter to General Ho urging that the order be made permanent and be rigidly enforced. A copy of the letter has been sent to the Military Governor of the province and a simliar letter in Chinese, signed by more than a dozen prominent Chinese residents, was sent at the same time. The letter reads as follows:

January 17, 1921.

Sir.—We, the undersigned citizens of Shanghai and or residents of Chapei, irrespective of race, nationality or religion, desire to express appreciation of your recent official action in regard to dives and brothels in various parts of the city outside of the settlement limits, and especially the following, which are on North Szechuen and Yukong Roads:

Jukong Road, 10: Boxers' Cafe Buffet, Palais Crystal Garden, Rialto Bar, Cafe De Paris, Cafe Venetia, Palermo, Central Cafe, Jew's Criterion Cafe, Social Cafe Bar, and El Dorado.

North Szechuen Road, 4: Shanghai Cafe Grill, Mascott Bar, International Bar, and Golden Eagle Bar.

We heartily endorse your action and respectfully and particularly urge that these fourteen dives be all permanently closed. All of them, we are informed, are owned by foreigners and licensed by the Chapei Constabulary.

They are on or near the North Szechuen Road, the only North and South thoroughfare for a large proportion of Shanghai residents. A great number of decent people daily pass these places. Of these a large proportion are school children, for the section of Shanghai served by the North Szechuen Road has within it many schools of several nationalities, including British, American, Japanese and, particularly, many Chinese schools. It is estimated that the Chinese students outnumber the others by something like six to one.

These saloons are subversive of morality and stimulants to evil living, and act as a powerful means of education on this large body of growing youth. It is imperatively necessary that this educational section of Shanghai be permanently protected from these indecent and evil influences.

In addition to promiscuous dancing, drinking and carousing during all hours of the day and night at these dens, intoxicated men coming therefrom frequently insult respectable women and girls passing by and respectable nearby shop-keepers.

The patrons of the Isis Theater, also of all nationalities and ages, have openly displayed before their eyes, at all times, vice in its most seductive and degrading aspect. It is well known that fracases are frequent and that injuries have been attempted and given, and life taken as a result of the influence of these dives.

In addition to being centers of indecency, these fourteen saloons incite to general lawlessness, for if reckless foreigners may thus break the peace with impunity, the Chinese population has a constant and dangerous example which incites them to do likewise.

These places are not generally nor exclusively frequented by Shanghai residents but are man-traps, in the main, for transient visitors to Shanghai, such as sailors or seafaring men particularly. Prostitutes at times openly ply their trade on these public roads. In short, these dens continually disturb the peace and are a constant menace to good government, morals and life.

Furthermore, we would point out that the good name of the officials responsible for permitting these dives to open, is also affected. The American and British authorities are dealing severely with cases of intoxication, disorderly conduct and breaches of the peace committed by their nationals, and for the public welfare it is necessary that their efforts be seconded by the Chinese

CUSTOM OFFICIALS ARE TO OPPOSE CANTONESE TITHE

Inspector General At Peking Says Interference Will Be Opposed

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Peking, Jan. 22.—Reuter learns that the attitude of the Inspector-General of Customs toward the proposal of the Canton Military Government to take over the administration of the Customs in the provinces under its control, is that he cannot admit any modification of the existing loan service arrangements, whereby the Martime and native customs revenue from the Southern provinces is remitted to his account and that any alteration which conflicts with China's international engagements can only be accepted with the unanimous approval of the diplomatic body as the representative of the other party to these engagements.

So far as is ascertainable there is not the least likelihood of the diplomatic corps giving its approval, as it is felt that nothing could contribute more to the permanent disruption of the country.

Canton, Jan. 19.—Maritime Customs officials here were reticent when questioned regarding the proposed taking over of the service by the Military Government.

A prominent foreign resident, when interviewed, stated that he feared that such action on the part of the Southern Government would call forth the disapproval of the leading Powers interested in the Customs Administration.

Another well-informed foreigner expressed the opinion that in the event of a dispute between the Military Government, and the Customs authorities, the Customs staffs would move from Canton to Shameen, and that importers would pay the duties there.

Prisoner Is Found Guilty Of Murder In Second Degree By Judge C. S. Lobingier In U. S. Court For China

Henry S. Furbush, the American seaman who killed Richard F. Hazelton, was sentenced to life imprisonment yesterday by Judge C. S. Lobingier in the United States Court for China. By the ruling of the court Furbush is found guilty of murder in the second degree and the penalty imposed was the maximum for this offense, as the law fixes the punishment for second degree murder at from ten years imprisonment up to life.

Sentence was pronounced at 12:15 and when Furbush stood to hear Judge Lobingier send him to prison for life the court room was crowded, with many standing in the doorway and in the corridor attempting to get a glimpse of the condemned man. Furbush is 26 years old and has a wife whom he left in America when he sailed on the Edgehill.

Furbush heard his sentence and sat down, dropping his head into his right hand. For a few minutes he seemed deeply moved but displayed unusual interest in two vagrancy cases which were called after Judge Lobingier had pronounced sentence. Mr. M. L. Heen, counsel for Furbush, asked that an exception to the court's ruling be entered in the record of the case.

UNUSUAL CRIME

The crime for which Furbush was sentenced was in some respects one of the most unusual in the criminal annals of Shanghai and it will probably have far-reaching effects in placing a curb on one phase of the night life of the Settlement.

The shooting occurred about midnight on the night of December 13 only a few hours after Furbush arrived in port on the American shipping board steamer Edgehill on which he was third engineer. After the ship docked he and Francis Quinn, another engineer on the steamer, set out about half past 6 o'clock to see Shanghai. Furbush was armed with a 32-calibre automatic pistol which he had borrowed from a member of the Edgehill's crew.

GO TO EL DORADO

After visiting a number of bars and questionable resorts Furbush and his companion went to the El Dorado Cafe in the Trenches some time before midnight. Both were then under the influence of liquor and they created considerable disturbance in the El Dorado dance hall.

Richard Hazelton, a youth of 20, was seated at a table with a number of friends when the disturbance began and to save a friend from annoyance that Furbush and Quinn were causing he assumed the role of peacemaker and engaged the two seamen in conversation seeking to quiet them. It was evident that he had induced them to leave the place, as he walked out of the room with the two.

Within a short space after they had left the dance hall a shot was heard and it was found then that Hazelton was badly wounded. While he was being removed to the Shanghai General Hospital, Furbush, who had fled, was taken into custody by an American sailor and an American marine who turned him over to the police. Hazelton died from his wound at the hospital five days later.

COURT'S RULING

The ruling of the court which was given after a protracted trial is as follows:

LOBINGIER, J.

On the evening of December 13, 1920, the accused, third assistant engineer of the Shipping Board vessel Edgehill, which had just arrived at Shanghai, left the ship in company with the second asistant to see some of the sights of the city. Together the pair visited three bars and a Chinese brothel, taking one or more alcoholic drinks at each place and finally reaching about eleven

R.V.F. HEAD HERE TRYING TO END LINE'S TROUBLES

Managing Director Of Vladivostok Administration Hopes To Arrange Matters

For the purpose of straightening out the tangle into which the rival adminstrations have brought the affairs of the Russian Volunteer Fleet here Captain D. A. Lukhmanoff, managing director of the Vladivostok Administration, has come to Shanghai and hopes to adjust matters so that the imperatively needed shipping service between Siberia and other parts of the Far East may shortly be made an effective reality.

The trouble which the R.V.F. ships from the North have experienced in Shanghai came as a complete surprise to him, the managing director said, particularly the restraint of the last two ships to arrive as a consequence of a judgment of Tls. 170,000 given by the Mixed Court in favor of the New Engineering and Shipbuilding Works.

THOUGHT ACCOUNTS CLEAR

It was the understanding at Vladivostok, Captain Lukhmanoff said, that the bills for repair work outstanding against the Fleet had been settled, funds believed to be sufficient for that purpose having been transmitted to the old Shanghai agency during the fore part of last year. The director will confer with officials of the shipbuilding company early this week and he stated yesterday that all legitimate accounts outstanding here would be settled in an effort to get the ships of the fleet into regular service between here and Vladivostok.

Captain Lukhmanoff exhibited letters and other documents showing the transfer to the Shanghai agency of various sums in March, April and May of last year for the payment of dock and repair work here. These included a letter of March 5 from Shanghai acknowledging the receipt of $70,000 through the Russo-Asiatic Bank, one showing the transfer from the Chefoo agency of Tls. 3,500 and $15,000 and one of May 2, in response to a specific request for money to pay such bills, recording the sending of £17,360.

It was the impression in Vladivostok that these remittances had cleared up all the outstanding bills, Capt. Lukhmanoff stated, and consequently the news of the restraint of the Astrakhan and Erivan caused the administration a good deal of astonishment.

COMMENT ON CLAIMS

Commenting on the claims and activities of the newly formed Constantinople Administration of the Fleet, Captain Lukhmanoff pointed out that the Russian Volunteer Fleet is a national organisation and not a private corporation and that therefore there could not be a transfer of administration outside of Russia by a few interested individuals.

Founded some 43 years ago by public subscriptions, taken under Government supervision, the Fleet was placed under control of the Board of Trade. Now that there is no European fleet, the ships of the company have been put under control of the Board of Trade of the Far Eastern Republic.

Capt. Lukhmanoff said he understood that the Constantinople directorate is putting the twelve ships which they control under the French flag and intend to operate to the Far East. The Vladivostok Administration has retained control of fifteen ships, including the two which are in port here.

Danish King And Queen Pay Visit To The Pope

Rome, Dec. 15.—King Christian X. of Denmark and Queen Alexandria today were received by Pope Benedict. The Pontiff and the royal visitors were together for half an hour in the Pope's private library. Benedict thanked Christian for the King's assistance in the papal proposal that the Bolsheviki in Russia allow the Russian grand duchesses to leave their country and come to Rome, to be maintained at the expense of the Pontiff.

This was the first time in about five centuries that a King of Denmark had entered the Vatican. Christian I., the first King of the Oldenbury family, was the last to come to Rome. This was in the year of 1474. When Christian X., his descendant, entered the Vatican today he was received with great pomp between the walls of the Apostolic Palace, where two Danish sovereigns, Canute IV. and Canute V., were canonised.

Smiles from the Mixed Court

A Chinese detective with an eye for contrasts had his attention arrested a morning or so since by the sight of Tsah Ping-sung, who was traveling hurriedly along Canton Road with a pail in one hand and a bed sheet folded beneath one arm.

The pail was bright and shining and obviously new and the sheet still had the price mark sketched expansively on a corner. Everything else about Tsah was venerable with age and frazzled by wear. His jacket was a mere network and his trousers were something to be regarded with mixed admiration and apprehension. Therefore the detective halted him and questioned him discreetly regarding the pail and bedclothes. Tsah said he had obtained them from friends who lived at 24 Pakhoi Road.

So they went there and found Mme. Tsen Vong-sz entertaining a circle of sympathising neighbors with the tale of how she had stepped without the house for a few brief moments and had returned to find the splendid bucket and expensive linen bed sheet which she had just purchased vanished completely.

"Yes," said Tsah when queried by the Court, "I took the things. But it was an afterthought. I went there intending to borrow a little money. But there was no one home. I thought it would be just the same if I took the pail and sheet."

It was not the same by a margin of seven days, as the Court explained to Tsah.

TEMPUS FUGITIVE

Zu Ah-ling told the Court that he was alighting from a tram car on Seward Road when he distinctly felt someone removing his watch and chain. Turning smartly about he saw Hyui Tsu-san with the timepiece in his hand. Whereupon he seized Hyui and bore him to a policeman.

Zu protested that he was the victim of an unusual accident.

"I was getting off the car," he said, "when suddenly a watch and chain fell into my hand."

"No," said he in reply to the magistrate, "I can't imagine how it came to fall out of the complainant's jacket either."

It was found that Zu had six previous convictions to his discredit, most of them for larceny of watches. So the Court presented him with a lot of time, stipulating that he spend it, however, in the Municipal jail, which will be his residence for the ensuing two years.

ERROR IN APPRAISAL

The glance of Police Watchman Woo Dzung-foo is like a Roentgen ray and when he saw Woo Kheling, who is not related to the first Woo, coming out of the godown a few evenings ago he immediately stopped him and removed seven box skins from the depths of his attire.

Woo admitted taking the pelts.

"They fell out of a bundle," he said, "and I picked them up. I didn't think they were of much use."

Laodah Who Deserted The Ship Is Fined $5

A laodah who failed to stick to the ship in time of stress, and thereafter omitted to report to his ship's owner, was fined $5 in the Mixed Court yesterday.

The charge, that of leaving his employer's service without notice, was brought against the laodah by Mr. Denegri. The testimony was to the effect that last April the houseboat was on a trip up country with four foreign passengers when it collided with another craft. It was during the night and the laodah and crew instead of rousing the passengers, took to the water and made for shore while the boat settled and finally turned turtle. The foreigners narrowly missed being trapped, but managed to get ashore in their pajamas. The laodah and crew did not remain to guard the boat and a number of its fittings were stolen.

It was only a few days ago that the missing skipper was located in Wusieh and was arrested.

Who are the
"BLIND HUSBANDS"
and their wives?

"Thrift is common sense applied to spending"

Thrift does not mean that you must have a throttle-hold on your pocketbook. It does not mean that you must forego all pleasures and luxury, for luxury within bounds is as necessary to the soul as food is to the body.

Luxury brings with it a love of the beautiful, which all highly developed people must have.

Thrift means rather an appreciation of values—getting the most for every dollar you spend.

JAPAN TO DROP PASS CONTROL IN MANCHURIA

American Citizens Already Exempted; Others To Be On Feb. 1

(Staff Wire To THE CHINA PRESS)

Peking, Jan. 22.—In reply to the notification of the American Legation under date of January 8, the Japanese Legation states that the Tokio Foreign Office has already decided to discontinue the examination of passports of all nationals in the Manchurian Railway zone beginning February 1.

However, the reply continued, in view of the desire of the American Government to discontinue the examination on and beginning January 15, the Tokio Government is desirous of avoiding misunderstanding and has therefore extended a special courtesy to the Americans by instructing the passport officials along the South Manchuria Railway zone to forthwith cease to demand Americans to produce their passports.

These instructions, according to the reply, reached the officials concerned on or about January 17. The Japanese thus managed to avoid the opening discussion of the issue of the sovereignty of Manchuria. The Japanese Legation on January 19 informed the Diplomatic Corps for the information of all Legations that the Japanese control of passports in Manchuria, with the exception of the ports of entry would be discontinued on February 1.

Nanyang College News

The final examinations for the fall term were held last week, and most classes have finished already.

The acting president, Mr. H. H. Ling, owing to his designing work of the bridges in the Hankow-Ichang Line, cannot return to College now. It is believed that the Ministry of Communication will nominate the new president before the next term.

Three new publications are announced in the college, "The Techanic of 1919," "The Railway Administration" and "The Nanyang Journal Vol. III, No. 3." The Techanic is the class-book of 1919, and though it comes out a little later, nevertheless it contains valuable articles on engineering design and reports, and the English short lifes of the graduates are most inspiring. The Railway Administration is also a class-book of that course of the year 1920, and treats purely on the administration side, laying emphasis on the conditions in our country up-to-date. The Nanyang Journal is issued by the Nanyang Students' Association, and is a science and engineering publication.

Mr. Penn Hsun was elected as one of the nine executive committees of the Shanghai Students' Union.

A Nanyang Winter Club has been organised, under the auspices of the college Y.M.C.A. and elected Mr. Jameson Y. Chang as the chairman. Through the courtesy of the city Y.M.C.A., the Club may use a room in the Association Building on Szechuen Road as a meeting place for the students residing in Shanghai. Many activities are planned on the social and athletic work during the vacation.

Thirty-one new students were enrolled in the entrance examination from about 100 candidates last week.

Bomb Explodes In Harbin Establishment

Harbin, January 21.—A packet addressed to M. Toporkoff, the manager of the Chooring Co., exploded at 10:30 this morning, when it was opened by an assistant in the center of the crowded shop. The assistant and four customers were seriously injured.

It appears that the packet was delivered by a cabman, who, when subsequently arrested, stated that he received it from an unknown person at Pristan (a river-side part of the city).

This is the fourth outrage in the last three months, and it is evident that the object was to create panic and unrest at Harbin. The construction of the bomb indicates the work of an expert.

Ship Company Head Denies Plot Against U.S. Marine Trade

(Reuter's Service)

Washington, January 21.—Admiral Benson, Chairman of the United States Shipping Board, in addressing the National Mercantile Marine Association today, referred to the present falling freights, coupled with increased outlay and lessening earnings for shipowners, and stated that the Board must proceed cautiously as regarded selling Government vessels, as it had been specially established to secure the permanency of the American Merchant Marine.

Senator Jones alleged that the International Mercantile Marine Company, which controls forty vessels, had made an agreement with the British Government in 1903 under which it was not to pursue a policy which would be injurious to the British Mercantile Marine or British trade. He insinuated that Anglo-American interests were bent on destroying the American Merchant Marine.

Mr. Franklin, the President of the company in question, sharply rejoined that the charge was unfair. He said that ninety percent of its stock was held by Americans.

Tokio Expert To Study Aeronautics In Foreign Lands

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Tokio, (by mail).—Dr. Takuro Tamaru, Professor of the Tokio Imperial University and an expert on aeronautics, has been ordered to Europe and America for a study of foreign aerial progress. He will leave in the middle of next month, and is expected to return to Japan towards the end of August.

The Jiji, which reports this, adds that the Professor's visit to Western countries bears a marked significance, as he is entrusted with an important international mission, in addition to the above object of general inspection.

(French Wireless through Reuter)

Paris, Jan. 21.—At the forthcoming meeting of the Council of the League of Nations on February 21, Dr. Wellington Koo, the Chinese Minister to the Court of St. James, will take part in the Council's proceedings for the first time.

The Council will deliberate upon the questions referred to it by the Assembly at Geneva, and particularly the appointment of the Commissions instructed to present reports to the next plenary Assembly of the League of Nations. Furthermore, the Council will discuss the different international problems which await its solution.

Japanese Demands On Hungchun Are Confined To Raids

(Staff Wire To THE CHINA PRESS)

Peking, Jan. 22.—The demands made by the Japanese Legation on China in connection with the Hungchun incident are confined to reparations for raids which took place on October 2 when property of the Japanese Government and residents were destroyed and Japanese lives were lost.

M. Obata, the Japanese Minister, who has just recovered from his illness, has personally explained the aide-memoir embodying the demands.

Dr. W. W. Yen, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, will take up the matter upon the completion of the withdrawal of Japanese troops from Hungchun. The withdrawal of their troops would not in any way effect the demands which they have presented.

German Steamer Is Handed To Allies

Paris, Jan. 21.—The German steamer Tirpitz, of 25,000 tons, has just been completed, and will be handed over to the Reparations Commission before the close of the present month.

Manhood Suffrage Squable In Japan

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Tokio, (by mail).—The question whether the desired manhood suffrage for Japan shall be limited or unlimited appears to be the rock upon which the Kenseikai Party may split, according to a report in the Yomiuri.

One section of the party wants to limit its campaign for the suffrage to those men only who earn "an independent livelihood," while others of the party are equally determined that there small be no qualifying phrases used whatever.

"What! Let even the beggars vote?" exclaim some of the Kenseikai leaders, to which others, including Messrs. Shimada and Ozaki reply: "Yes. Why not?"

Such an idea, however, is too much for the majority to swallow. The matter of attempting to discipline the minority is expected to be settled at some early meeting of the party leaders.

"On All Sides I See But Living Skeletons"

Extract from letter received From Chinese Jesuit Priest—

"Most of the people in the district of Han Tan, Chihli province, are likely to die because of the famine," is the prediction made by a Chinese Jesuit priest, Father Simon Li.

"Here, at Han Tan and You Men, I am living among the dying, who are constantly uttering heart-rending sobs. On all sides I see but living skeletons, hideous famine-stricken faces and innumerable corpses. This dreadful famine has now reached its climax, and most of the people in my district are likely to die soon."

Chefalo And Palermo

To evoke encomiums in all parts of the world and to receive unstinted praise from other magicians is surely a record that any artist would be proud of. Yet this is what Chefalo and Palermo, magicians, have done all over Europe, both continents of America, Africa and Australia and now they come to the East to conquer. The New York World describing their act said: "The Pantages bill is headed by Chefalo and Palermo and their company of five persons who deliver the goods along the lines of mystery.

Thousands Idle In Japan's Silk Mills

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Tokio, Jan. 21.—Despite the optimism expressed by the authorities, the effect of the present depression is shown in the increasing unemployment, according to the Chugai Shogyo, which reports that the Sanryusha Silk Co. of Okazaki has dismissed three thousand women reelers.

Business is affected to such an extent that it will be impossible to re-employ them for two years, says a director of the Company.

The Yonago Filature Co. is reported to have discharged six hundred reelers.

Winner Of Nobel Prize Once Conductor On Chicago Horse Car

Knut Hamsun, winner of the Nobel literature prize for 1920, once was a conductor on a Chicago horse car line and was fired from that job because he could not remember the names of streets. That was forty years ago. Today, after winning the $50,000 Nobel prize, he is acclaimed as the greatest fiction writer of Scandinavia. While in this country Mamsun worked as a dishwasher, house-painter, conductor and lumber-jack. He is a Norwegian, sixty years old, and is now living on his estate in Norway.

(Reuter's Service)

London, January 20.—A number of distinguished British Generals attended the Japanese Embassy today to receive from the Ambassador the orders of the Rising Sun and Sacred Treasure, which had been conferred upon them by the Emperor.

Mischa Elman Coming

It is generally considered that perhaps one of the most important points in a woman's success with our present day concert audiences is the necessity to be beautifully gowned. This not only enhances the natural beauty of the wearer, but it also immediately creates a point of contact and interest between the audience—for the most part of women—and the artist. It is the interesting conclusion of Mischa Elman, the great violinist, who is to appear here at the Town Hall on February 1 and 5 that the same holds true among men.

"I find that when I mount the concert platform, bow in hand, dressed in a Prince Albert which Beau Brummel himself might feel proud of, the audience responds with much greater rapidity than when this is not so. Just to test this theory and to find out whether it is really true or not, I have a number of times purposely omitted some minor fine point of my wardrobe and, curiously, I found that it was more difficult to establish myself with my audience than on the other hand."

Peace Restored In Kosseir Mountains

(French Wireless through Reuter)

Paris, Jan. 21.—The operations undertaken by the Goubeau column in the Kosseir mountains of Syria—the refuge of the bands which have lately been active at Giar-el-Chugur and Derkuch—have during the last few weeks been completed most satisfactorily.

Three village headmen have tendered their submission, and the rebel bands have been dispersed, after having liberated the infantry whom they had held prisoners for some months past, and given up the booty which they had seized. The bands fled before the French column which was sent against them, and peace has been entirely restored in this region.

Communications To Be Parley Topic In Spain March 10

(French Wireless through Reuter)

Paris, Jan. 21.—As the result of the preparatory conference which has been held in Paris during the past few days, the Secretariat of the League of Nations has fixed March 10 as the date for the assembling at Barcelona of the International Communications Conference, over which M. Gabriel Manotaux will preside.

The object of this Conference will be to remove as far as possible the present hindrances to railway communication and the transport of merchandise, and also to draft a scheme of international harbor regulations.

Peasants Recalling Sons From Service With Red Forces

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Vladivostok, Jan. 21.—A message from Habarovsk states that the peasants are recalling their sons from the Red forces in view of the fact that the authorities are sending detachments into the villages to requisition grain.

KOHINOOR LOCKOUT ENDS

Chinese Woman's Club Makes Rapid Strides; Establishes Free Schools

Organisation Plan Is To Follow Idea Adopted By American Women

With aims, which include the raising of $4,000 for the purpose of establishing free schools for poor children in Shanghai, uniting the educated Chinese women of the city in social and civic interests, and cultivation of a closer friendship between the Chinese and foreign women, the Chinese Woman's Club promises to become a force in Shanghai.

The club will hold a special meeting this week when the plan of organisation will be completed. Dr. Mary Stone, president of the club, will preside at the meeting and reports from various committees will be made.

Miss Mayling Soong, graduate of Wellesley College and an officer of the Woman's College Club who is taking an active part in the organisation of the Chinese Woman's Club. Miss Soong is chairman of the Publicity Department.

FOLLOW AMERICAN WOMEN

According to Dr. Mary Stone the club will pattern its activities after those of the American Woman's Club in Shanghai and will carry on department work.

The departments to be featured in the Chinese Woman's Club are: social service, reception, art and science, mother's section and publicity.

The Social Service Department is at work and has opened nine free schools of primary grade in the city for poor children each one maintained at a cost of $300. The members are striving to raise $4,000 to extend the educational work among the children and have secured pledges for more than half of this amount.

The first social function given under the auspices of the club in the city was a reception and tea in honor of Mrs. Frederick W. Stevens, wife of Mr. Stevens of the Banking Consortium.

The business of the club will be carried on in the Mandarin dialect but all important motions and business will be presented to the members in Mandarin, the Shanghai dialects and English.

Commercial News To Be Specialty Of Wireless Station Here

(CHINA PRESS Correspondence)

Peking, January 20.—The Japanese Legation has lodged with the Foreign Office a protest against the loan and construction agreement recently concluded by the Ministry of Communications with the American Federal Telephone and Telegraph Company for the erection of an overseas wireless sending station in Shanghai, with various smaller substations.

This protest is based on the alleged grounds that the contemplated construction will be inimical to the interests of the Mitsui station contracted for in April, 1918, and now half completed, which is situated between Peking and Tungchow. The one station, the Japanese maintain, is quite sufficient to handle all China's overseas traffic.

The Japanese protest constitutes the second protest against the new concession, a protest having been lodged by the British government in the interest of the Marconi Company several days ago. It is believed, however, that the American promoters will entrench themselves behind the non-monopoly rights guaranteed all treaty-powers in the various treaties and protocols.

The new American station at Shanghai, will, it is planned, make a specialty of commercial news transmission, and will have a capacity for receiving and sending of three thousand words of press messages per day.

EMPRESS IN SATURDAY

The Canadian Pacific Ocean Services liner, Empress of Russia, will arrive in Shanghai from Vancouver January 29 and on the same day, the Empress of Japan, is scheduled to reach Shanghai from Hongkong.

Famine Relief Loan Available As Soon As Audit Is Made

(CHINA PRESS Correspondence)

Peking, January 20.—The four million dollar famine relief loan between the four banks, Hongkong, Shanghai Banking Corporation, International Banking Corporation, Yokohama Specie Bank and Bank Industrielle de Chine, on the one hand and the Chinese Ministry of Finance on the other was signed by the representatives of the banks and the Chinese government in the premises of the Hongkong-Shanghai Banking Corporation between four and five o'clock yesterday afternoon. The amount is now available as soon as the auditing and administrative committee of nine Chinese and nine foreign famine relief workers has organised and is ready to function.

The government having met the requirement of the French Legation in regard to a deferred date for the beginning of the collection of the customs surtax, that surtax will be collected by the Customs authorities from March 1, without any exceptions for goods which may have been shipped before its promulgation.

NO ESCAPING WAR PLAYWRIGHT SAYS

Henry Arthur Jones Sees Inevitable Conflict From Overpopulation Of World

EDUCATIONAL FAILURES

The 85 Percent Who Must Do Manual Labor Are Being Educated To Hate It'

BY ELIZABETH ESKEY

New York, Dec. 5.—"The whole trouble in England and America today," said Henry Arthur Jones, "is that 85 per cent of the population have to do manual labor and they are being educated to hate it."

The English playwright arrived in America a few days ago to superintend the production of one of his plays in the cinema; but plays and the theater, he says, are no longer his chief interest. He has his knife out—such a coarse figure of speech seems humorously incongruous when associated with the urbane elderly gentleman of rosy complexion and twinkling eye, who confounds his enemies with an illustration drawn from "Alice in Wonderland," who chats of the poets and confesses that all the way across from England, when he ought to have been working, he was reading Milton, "amazed, as I always am, that words can take such wonderful forms of beauty."

But Henry Arthur Jones has turned aside from art, temporarily at least, and he does have his knife out for bolshevism, pacifism, internationalism and all the other isms that distract the body politic. He has his knife out also for H. G. Wells as a man of misguided theories, to whom he has been addressing open letters about Russia and "the terror, misery, bloodshed and ruin that must inevitably follow any attempt to govern a country upon international proletarian principles." Above all, he has his knife out for the present system of popular education, which, he says, "fosters confusions and fallacies of political thought and encourages social disorder," and which he holds responsible for other evils, from bad carpentering and printing to the decline of the drama.

WRONG SYSTEM

"Eighty-five percent of our population," he said in an interview at the Hotel Brevoort, "have to earn their living by manual labor before the social machine will work. We are educating about 85 percent of them in such a way that they will hate and avoid manual labor. After fifty years of popular education it is almost impossible for a lower or middle class family to get a drawer that will slide or a window sash that will work easily, or a door that will close properly. The carpentry work in our cheap modern houses and apartments is for the most part abominably bad, inconvenient, treacherous and perishable. I cite domestic carpentry because it is a basic universal industry, which affects us all in our homes. But conditions are the same in other industries. Workingmen make for each other all their own articles of everyday use. If these things are not made well the fault must rest with themselves in not giving sufficient time, or skill, or thought, or energy to this primary business of life, or upon a system of popular education that must be radically vicious or defective because it does not teach them the first great lesson of all education—to do their particular work in the world honestly and with all their might.

"It is not a question of capital and labor. It is a question of honesty or dishonesty of workmanship in each particular calling. The first duty of popular education is to teach that all careless, scamped and dishonest work is a crime against the State. Till workingmen learn this hard lesson no adjustments of capital and labor, no massacre of middlemen and exploiters, will better their lot; and no classical or mathematical attainments will be other than foolish and wasteful furbelows—a spangled cloak thrown over a body eaten by cancer.

"I do not say that popular education is accountable for all the bad carpentry that is done. I do say that concurrently with the spread of popular education carpenters generally have received an increasingly defective education in their own craft.

"There is doubt that general education does raise the level of intelligence in the community, and in many ways adds to its pleasures, if not wholly to its well being, but are there not good grounds for thinking that general education is often the enemy of that thorough special education in our individual work and duty which is the first necessity for the ultimate welfare of the State?

"Our future necessities are such that we shall be far more in need of workmen than scholars. We have at our disposal only a limited amount of time, of physical energy and of mental capacity. There is pressing need for the most rigorous economy in all of them."

So he went on to outline the system of popular education which he considers desirable.

"Any child with quite exceptional mental ability should be given an opportunity to develop it in any way that may prove most useful to the State," he said. "Children of mental ability considerably above the average should also be selected for appropriate higher education. Of the remaining mass, that is, the vast majority of children—the boys should be carefully divided into groups, according to their indicated capacity for different kinds of physical employment, or for occupations which do not call for the possession of much general or special knowledge or for the exercise of any conspicuous mental powers. They should be given as much general education as would be almost certain to prove useful to them in their probable occupation. They should be given ample opportunities for higher education if they choose to avail themselves of it. But higher education should not be forced upon any of them.

"All the boys should be thoroughly drilled and taught the first elements of soldiering—just enough to fit them for further training in the defense of their country if that dread duty should be forced upon them."

WHY WE CAN'T STOP WAR

This raised the ever-present questions of the wrongfulness of war and the practicability of a League of Nations.

"Of course war is wrong," said the playwright. "And why do we not all agree to stop it? For the same reason that we do not all agree to stop lying and stealing.

"Let us project ourselves into the future. Let us suppose that the League of Nations, throughout a long lapse of years and many generations, has fulfilled the most ardent desires of its promoters. The covetings and passions of the forty-six nations have been ruled out of order by the decisions of our committee. Wars have ceased. Armaments have gradually fallen into disuse. Weapons of destruction are no longer manufactured. The last great war in the twentieth century has become a mere dusty storehouse for historians and romancers. Under the long reign of peace, and aided by science and mechanics, mankind has increased and multiplied at an ever swiftening rate, until he has occupied all the fertile spaces of the earth, from the sands of the Tropics to the ice fringes of the Poles. Old nations have dwindled and perished; new nations and races have arisen and multiplied. And meanwhile, terrified by the past awful example of the World War, the turbulent new young races have meekly trodden the paths of peace, obedient to the rulings of our committee, which has nicely accommodated and smoothed away every difficulty, every animosity, every aggression, every threat of disruption as it arose.

WORLD OVERPOPULATED

"But, owing to the continued prosperity and abundance brought about by perpetual peace, the earth has become inconveniently and dangerously overpopulated. Unfortunately, the various peoples have kept on breeding; and the younger races have been breeding much faster than the older ones. These vigorous upstarts have been growing more and more dissatisfied with the stretches of territory, the privileges and the opportunities for expansion allotted to them by our committee. They have long been a gathering threat to the peaceful economy of the world established by the League of Nations—these fast multiplying parvenus with odious practices in morals and complexions equally objectionable. For, in a world once and for all made safe for democracy, Nature, having none of our prejudices against a shady complexion, has allowed and encouraged an altogether disproportionate increase in these swarthy, unscrupulous breeders. Hitherto they have been kept in awe by the sage admonitions and decisions of our committee, and by the tradition handed down from the early twentieth century that war is a cruel and horrible process and that its weapons are so dangerous and destructive that it is inadvisable to meddle with them. Under a system of universal popular education these young races have possessed themselves of all the discoveries of science. Their growing ambitions, their pride of adolescent strength, their consciousness of power, their desire of mastery over the older nations, their sense of not being allotted their proper place in the world—all these ineradicable human instincts and passions have long been unbearably suppressed and contained. And the world is over-populated, and its desirable and habitable territory is occupied.

DESPITE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

"Can any one imagine a general condition of affairs more certain to lead to a worldwide devastating war? Yet some such general condition of affairs must be the inevitable result of a League of Nations if its operations are continuously successful. Nor can its advocates indicate any definite possible alternative without postulating that the fundamental instincts and passions of humanity will change and that man will become a creature of so different a nature from ourselves that no prognosis can be made about him.

"America has rejected the League of Nations, rightly judging that no country should pledge itself to deal with successive threatening international situations by involved, amiable, abstract rulers, rightly judging that no threatening international situation can be wisely dealt with until it has actually arisen and until it is so far developed and defined that each country may take that course which its honor and its permanent interests mark out for it at that precise moment. The question is, 'Will not the statesmen of England and France and Italy accept that verdict?'"

"Then there is no remedy for war?" I said.

He shook his head.

"If I had made the world," he answered whimsically, "I should have made a better one, but unfortunately I didn't make it. I think it is just possible that a remedy for war may be found in religion, though what that new religion may be I do not know. Certainly I cannot subscribe to the religion of the catechism. I have just suggested religion as a possible ultimate solution in my last book, 'Patrictism and Popular Education,' which is a discussion of these matters."

HIS KNEES WERE SWOLLEN WITH RHEUMATISM

Was Pain-Racked Night and Day. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Again Prove The Right Remedy in Colombo.

Most of the treatments for Rheumatism are directed at the symptoms and only temporarily relieve the pain and stiffness, if they give any relief at all. It is by driving the rheumatic poison out of the blood, which whilst purifying they also enrich, that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills prove so permanently effective as a remedy for this malady. The testimony of Mr. B. D. Rodrigo which follows is but one of thousands received:—

"Some eight years ago I suffered terribly with Rheumatism," said Mr. Rodrigo, who is employed in the Office of the Superintendant of Police, Colombo, Ceylon. "This dreadful malady," he continued, "affected me principally in the joints, especially in my knees, which became very swollen and intensely painful. The glands on each side of my neck were sore and swollen so that it was only with difficulty that I could turn my head. At the same time I suffered with flatulence and had continual pains in the abdomen. At night I could get very little sleep.

"This continued off and on for three or four years, the pains in my legs becoming so bad at times that I could hardly get about at all; in fact once I was compelled to give up work for a month. Naturally I worried a great deal and became much depressed.

"It chanced that I picked up a booklet about Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and this brought to my mind the fact that my sister had received much benefit from taking these Pills some years previously. I decided to see if they would do my Rheumatism any good, and, to my intense delight, found that after taking the contents of only one bottle there was a marked improvement. As I continued the treatment the swelling in my joints and glands subsided, and by degrees all pains and stiffness left me; the flatulence ceased and I could again enjoy a good night's rest. This happened about four years ago and I have had no return of the rheumatism since, thanks solely to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

As a remedy for disorders arising from vitiated watery blood or disordered nerves and as a tonic for the whole system, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People have been pre-eminent for over thirty years. They are obtainable from medicine vendors everywhere, also post free at $1.50 per bottle, $8.00 for 6 bottles from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., 96 Szechuen Road, Shanghai.

Weekly Sales Bulletin

No. I Vol. 1 SHANGHAI, SUNDAY, 23rd JANUARY 1921 00 CENTS

OUR BIRTHDAY TALK

This being the first member of the Weekly Sales Bulletin, the editor begs to announce to the reading public that these columns will be devoted exclusively to news items of interest, articles by local authorities on motor cars, and advertisements. These "ads" will probably be almost exclusively "bargains in used cars." In fact, any used car advertised will be a bargain!

To the "man who owns one" this sheet will be of interest also, as "want ads" will appear from time to time—offering cash for certain models of used cars.

As the price per copy of the "Bulletin" and yearly subscription are both so ridiculously low, every man in Shanghai can afford to be a reader. We thank you in anticipation of your patronage—THE EDITOR.

? If any one in Shanghai knows of a better value than the six cylinder Delage-phaeton we are featuring this week, please phone the editor—Will buy it! This car has been owner driven since its birth—and has been cared for by the owner himself. Come early and avoid the rush.

For hire cars phones Cent. 3809.

A Buick 49—7 pass.—1920 model. The actual mileages being only 2,500, one may say this car is really only "warmed up." We feel sorry for the former owner that he had to go "homeside" so soon after buying this car. He probably felt worse than that!

However the next owner will be more satisfied than the former was sorry.

Firestone Tires are still the most popular in the Far East.

A Renault 2 cyl. roadster. The name in itself is enough to arouse the interest of a motor car "fan." We would like someone to make us a reasonable offer for this car, and then drives out a satisfied purchaser.

All repair work efficiently, satisfactorily and quickly done at 9 Hongkong Road. Phone Cent. 6001.

With gasoline at $1.00 per gallon, the man who contemplates purchasing a car would do well to figure out the gas consumption problem also. And while he's in that contemplative state of mind, he should call in to see and ride in the "Baby Peugeot" that has just been overhauled and repainted.

All car sales are hauled at our new garage at No. 9 Hongkong Road.

Four hundred and fifty taels will buy a recently painted and overhauled Overland Roadster! A small price but a big value. Just the thing to go back and forth to your business if you don't want to take the "big" car.

Call at No. 9 Hongkong Road and let us show you through the most completely equipped plant incorporated in any garages in the Far East.

Tuesday morning we are taking in trade, a 1919 Maxwell five seater. After a slight overhaul and a few coats of paint and varnish, this will make someone a splendid, light, economical and attractive car. The purchaser may select paint to suit his taste.

Order a closed car from Central 3809 and ride in comfort.

Another unusual offering is a splendid little Darracq. This car needs paint, and we'll let you select it.

We hold the agency for Bosch Magnetos.

Harding And The League

His Unique Opportunity

BY FRANK H. SIMONDS
(New York Tribune)

At the outset of any discussion of the European reactions resulting from the Presidential election in the United States, it is essential to note the various positions of the several European powers toward the league of nations itself. For obvious reasons the effect upon the various publics abroad is conditioned, first, upon their original attitude toward the project of the league, and, secondly, upon their eventual attitude, determined by their necessities and resulting policy during the Paris conference.

Thus one must recognise in the beginning that the chief disappointment over what must be recognised in President-elect Harding's ante-and-post election remarks upon the league and his decision to "scrap" the covenant, will be British. Two reasons explain this—first, the covenant, the whole league of nations scheme, was in the main a British creation, which derived no more than its vaguest inspiration from President Wilson's views; second, that in the nature of things the league thus constructed in accordance with British nations and mainly by Britons themselves, best answered British ideas of world association.

By contrast, French disappointment does not in the least arise from any pride of authorship or enthusiasm for principles expressed in the league of nations. France had nothing to do with the framing of the covenant and never had the smallest enthusiasm for the idea of a league of nations as conceived by Wilson and as created by Lord Robert Cecil, General Smuts and the only less industrious British representatives at Paris. The French submitted to the league solely because they saw in it the only way to enlist the necessary support of the United States and retain the only less valuable aid of the British, who frankly indicated that for France to reject President Wilson's purposes would mean to destroy the Anglo-French alliance.

As for Italy, there never was even lip service by the Italian representatives at Paris, to the league of nations covenant. Italy entered the world war only after she had made a definite contract with the nations in arms against Germany. That contract, the treaty of London of 1915, assured to her certain specific territorial rewards for participation, namely the frontier of the Alps, to include Southern Tyrol as well as the Trentino district. Venetia Julia, that is Trieste and the Istrian shore, Northern Dalmatia without Fiume, but with many of the islands of the Adriatic littoral, a protectorate over Albania and material profits in Asia Minor, including Smyrna.

At Paris Italy presented her contract, the note which had become due and on which she had given to her allies an enormous contribution in the shape of four great campaigns, which had brought instead of swift victory a long struggle, incidental defeat and disastrous invasion. The sole business of Orlando and Sonnino at Paris was to collect their note. But provided Wilson proved favorable to Italian purposes, Italian statesmen were quite prepared to give equal favor to his When, instead, Wilson disclosed unalterable hostility to almost all of Italian claims, Italy quit the conference and subsequently signed the treaty only under British pressure.

Outside of the great powers there was at the outset real enthusiasm for the league of nations not because of its altruistic and idealistic provisions, but because all the little states, many of them represented by very great men, saw in the league a guarantee and a physical military guarantee of their integrity. On this point Wilson spoke often, but never more emphatically than in his speech of May 31, concerning the exact text of which there was a dispute between President Wilson and Senator Spencer, a dispute referred by the former to the Missouri electorate and decided by that electorate in favor of Spencer.

But when President Wilson, in the Paris debates, joined with Lloyd George in restricting Polish aspirations and manufacturing the hideous Danzig compromise, denied to Rumania her Bessarabian claims, which were warranted even under his own principles insisted upon the right of the great powers to intervene on behalf of the minorities in the domestic affairs of the small, the enthusiasm of Poland, of Greece, (denied Western Thrace), of Rumania, of Serbia, even of Czecho-Slovakia began to cool. Finally Rumania and Serbia followed Italy and quit the conference altogether, later giving formal but by no means enthusiastic assent to the various treaties, including the covenant of the league of nations.

All this is ancient history, but necessary to any accurate view of the new situation. It follows quite naturally that the British will exert their utmost effort to save as much of the existing covenant of the league of nations as is possible, because for them it is not only entirely satisfactory, but represents the maximum of their hopes and is the product, in the main, of their own very able diplomacy at Paris. All modifications of the covenant involve disturbances to British purposes which are expressed in the league.

Beyond all else the British will be most disappointed by any elimination of the elements which the American election seems to foreshadow as most certainly doomed, namely, those which impose responsibilities upon the contracting powers, while giving them enormous rights to interfere in world affairs. I wish I could make it clear once for all to my readers that to the English mind the league of nations was no more

Bolshevism In Russia Condemned As A Complete Failure By Italian Radicals, Who Expected A Paradise On Earth

BY ARTHUR BENINGTON

HERE is a most important document. It is the report to the Socialist Party of Italy of a committee of its own leaders who were sent to Russia a few months ago to study Bolshevism on the spot. The report was so distasteful to the extreme Italian Socialists that their own official paper was not permitted to publish it and every effort was made to suppress it entirely.

The Committee was composed of the following men: Signor Bianchi, General Organizer of the Federation of Labor; Signor Colombino, Socialist Member of Parliament; Signor d'Aragona, Socialist Member of Parliament and one of the leaders of the recent strikes and occupation of factories by the workmen; Signor Serrati, Editor in Chief of L'Avanti, official organ of the Socialist Party; and Signori Graziadei, Bombacci and Vacirca, all Members of Parliament and active leaders of the Socialist Party.

They went to Russia fully expecting to find a land flowing with milk and honey. They returned completely disillusionised. Their report painted Russia under Bolshevist rule in such black tints that the radical leaders decided to suppress it. Complete success would have crowned this effort had not the Trieste correspondent of Il Resto del Carlino, a leading daily of Bologna and one of the best papers in Italy, been very much on the job when the Socialist Labor Congress met in Trieste in the first week of October. The members of the Committee paused for a day or two in Trieste on their way back from Russia, and this correspondent secured a copy from one of them, and telegraphed it at once to his paper. So on October 6, Il Resto del Carlino published the suppressed document almost in full, thus scoring a "beat" on all the other newspapers of Italy. So far as I have been able to learn, Il Resto del Carlino is the only paper that has published any of the report.

That this is accurate and authentic is quite certain, for no paper, Socialist or otherwise, has questioned it and no Socialist leader has thrown doubt upon it.

Here follows a liberal translation without comment. It speaks for itself and is of the deepest significance because of the personality of its authors, who have hitherto been regarded as among the most radical of all the Italian Socialists.

Revolution Helps Peasants But Puts Blight On City Folk

The Italian Mission was officially and most cordially feted. The Bolsheviki, especially in Petrograd, overwhelmed them with kindness and assistance. Throughout their travels the Italians had the best of opportunity to look about them with their own eyes. It would be exaggeration to speak of popular enthusiasm, for in Russia the people are usually absent from every manifestation of political life and just manage to live. If the Russian people had not been endowed with a very big dose of resignation and indifference one could not explain how they have adapted themselves to such unsatisfactory conditions of life.

It is naturally necessary to take into account the fact that 85 percent of the Russian population is made up of inhabitants of the rural districts of peasants, who, as a matter of fact, have derived more benefit than harm from the revolution, simply because the revolution has failed of its object in the country. The peasants actually escape the direct domination of the Bolsheviki and attached to the small property they have gradually acquired, they make up a mass that is impermeable to the principles of pure communism. Yet, at the same time, they are ready to defend the new regime against any reactionary attempt.

It may be said, to sum up, that the peasants live no worse than they lived before. In the cities, among the urban proletariat, on the contrary, are to be noted much sadder conditions of life, but compensated, so to speak, by greater acquiescence in the present state of affairs. The conditions of physical depression in which the masses exist in the cities contribute powerfully to lower their morale.

One manifestation of this lowering of vital tone among the Russian people may be seen in the almost absolute disappearance of prostitution. There is not a shadow of truth in the almost absolute disappearance of prostitution. There is not a shadow of truth in the stories put into circulation some time ago of the attempt at "nationalisation of women." Communism has no ripercussion of this kind. The Russians enter willingly into matrimony in the same spirit as formerly, and they are far more chaste than ever they were. The fact that sexual impulses have very much diminished is in all probability a phenomenon of malnutrition.

MISERY IN THE CITIES

Neither has Communism had a sensible effect on religious life. The sacred ikons continue to be venerated in the churches, on the roads and in the factories. The "International" seems to have become a sacred hymn in Russia.

The economic section of the commission can do no less than set down as a fact that the economic life of the cities is characterised by the most absolute material and moral misery.

A complex system of rationing and price fixing of the principal food stuffs of the Government prevails; bread, salt and sugar are distributed directly by this system. But what the population succeeds in obtaining from the Government is far below its needs. All the other foodstuffs and other merchandise are pledged to the co-operative societies and most of them are freely dealt in, that is to say, in speculation which is abolished theoretically but flourishes in reality.

It could not be otherwise. To make free commerce disappear, the State would have to assume completely all the functions of trade and provide for furnishing to all citizens all that is necessary to life; but, as the state is very far from being able to attain this result, it is obliged to tolerate the work of the speculators. The prices effected by these are frightfully higher than the so-called "fixed" prices; but only by this means can a certain part of the population of the cities succeed, at the cost of incredible sacrifices, in maintaining its alimentary balance a little lower than the normal level.

The Russian Government has based its system of rationing upon a mathematical calculation, taking count of the exact number of calories necessary to the existence of an individual for a certain given period; but it has been proved that in practice the monthly allowance of food has never reached the established minimum; in certain months it has not reached even 10 percent of this minimum.

DIFFERENCE IN PRICES

The following figures will serve as an example of the difference between the "fixed" prices and those of the open market. A pound of rice costs, according to the "fixed" prices, 28 rubles; at Petrograd, in the open market, it was 1,700 rubles. The "fixed" price of a bottle of milk is also 28 rubles; in the open market it costs at least 300. In the same way, bacon jumps from 52 to 3,500 rubles, sugar from 15 to 4,200, and, though the "fixed" price of poultry in general is 177 rubles a pound, a fowl costs 4,000 rubles in Moscow and 7,000 in Petrograd.

One must, naturally, take into account the very small value of the ruble, seeing that with one of our lire you can buy at least 250 rubles. [A lira is usually worth 19 1-3 cents. Today it is worth a little more than 3 cents.] Though this may be an advantage to the foreigner in Russia, it means nothing to the Russian, whose earnings also are expressed in rubles. Thus an Italian who wants to have a pair of shoes resoled in Petrograd must spend a number of rubles that corresponds to about 50 lire—not an excessive price—but the resoling costs the Russian workingman 12,000 rubles. That is to say, one and a half times his pay for a month, if this reaches the uncommon amount of 8,000 rubles.

One has to have a ticket for bread, sugar and salt. The economic kitchens supply to all, at the "fixed" price, a daily plate of soup and, for certain categories of laborers, a portion of "cascia," which is a sort of mush made with millet flour and vetch. Millet and vetch enter also into the composition of bread, which is made with flour bolted at 95 percent and baked only in great loaves weighing more than ten pounds with a humidity of about 50 percent.

Bread is the basis of the food of the State. All citizens, whether workers or not, have a right to a specific ration of bread, sop, sugar and salt; to be precise, 160 grams of bread a day, 420 grams of sugar and as many of salt a month. But special rations ("pajoc") are established for certain classes of the population. Thus workmen engaged in heavy labor and certain specialists have a right to 315 grams of bread a day besides 100 cigarettes a month. Employees who work more than six hours a day have a right to 210 grams of bread, 315 grams of sugar, as many of salt and 75 cigarettes; those who work at least six hours and women keeping house who have more than two babies, have a right to 105 grams of bread, 210 of sugar, as many of salt, and 75 cigarettes.

PAID PARTLY IN FOOD

It is noteworthy that the hours of labor are eight for workmen and six for other employees. Besides, a favored treatment, according to the importance of their duties, is given to professors and intellectuals such as scientists and artists, the families of soldiers and sailors and babies under a certian age, these having a right to 315 grams of bread a day, a certain distribution of milk, sugar and substitutes for coffee or tea, all free. For mothers, on the birth of a child, a bonus of 8,000 rubles is established either in money or whenever possible, in the form of a nest-egg for the newly born.

Since the workers are paid partly in cash and partly in foodstuffs, they receive in addition to the ration of bread, soup, etc., a monthly stipend that varies from 1,800 to 3,000 rubles. Clerks are paid a trifle more. The figures are fixed by the state, according to a scale of wages that has thirty-five categories.

But it seems to be the intention of the Communists to abolish money entirely as a means of paying wages; workers, according to the pure theory, ought to be paid in kind, that is, fed and supported by the state, but without ever touching a penny in cash.

The disastrous effects of the passage of the organisations for production directly into the control of the workers are already well known; they became almost completely inactive, and the country, except for a few trifling exceptions, has not yet succeeded in getting out of this almost complete stagnation of industry. It is true that the Bolshevik Government has been obliged, first of all to make war, and that this absorbed its greatest energy; but to judge from what little it has attempted in the way of economic reconstruction, it is to be doubted if Russia, abandoned as she is to herself, will ever succeed in returning to supportable conditions of civil life, except at some undeterminable epoch.

This is to be explained by the great efficiency in the preparation and technical capacity which were necessary to realise, or at least to begin to realise, such a radical communistic experiment. When the revolution asserted itself, with the coming of the Bolsheviki into power, it lacked all those organisations of a collective character on which the new regime might be implanted. All the industrial and commercial organisation that had been created to satisfy the needs of private and collective life were destroyed, and it was necessary to make a series of improvisations to take their place. Thus, for the production and distribution of foodstuffs, when the life of industry and large and small private commerce had been made impossible there were created organisations similar to our co-operative societies, made up of impractical employees, and these have had to transform themselves while performing the most varied functions in the field of food supply. These organisations, which should have provided for all the necessities of life, have produced an enormous beaucratic growth. Bureaucracy has invaded everything. At Petrograd, the population of which now amounts to only 600,000 inhabitants, about 40,000 persons are employed merely in the distribution of bread, sugar and salt, working two flour mills, ten bakeries and a few hundred economic kitchens.

MANY COMPROMISES

All the palaces in the city and all the country houses of the rich have been requisitioned by the State and made to serve as government offices and institutions; a very small part of them has remained at the disposition of the homeless.

But all the vast machinery built up by the Bolsheviki gives the least possible return. Hence the government has had to make a multitude of compromises with its declared principles, when confronted with the stern necessities of economic life. Theoretically, private property has been abolished, but in reality—as we already know—speculation is tolerated and they have had to permit even small industry, without which the country would not know where to find certain largely consumed foods. The State itself turns to small industry for military supplies. Industries which do not employ more than ten workmen, if they operate with machinery, and up to twenty workmen if without machinery, may continue privately, that is, according to the old principles of capitalistic economy. This regulation, like so many others, is naturally evaded. In consequence of the activity which certain persons succeed in pursuing, through the survival of free—or abusive—commerce and industry, and also in consequence of the politically and materially privileged situation which others succeed in attaining, a real new bourgeoisie is forming.

Thus does the social equality inscribed in the program of the Communists end, resolving itself simply into the reduction of those who formerly found themselves in an inferior condition of life to an equal level of greater misery.

To this the masses adapt themselves by their extraordinary acquiescence in events as these develop. Such a situation could never have endured but for the natural resources bequeathed by the old regime to the new. That such an economic situation continues, notwithstanding that production is so far from satisfying the needs of consumption, is really explained by the fact that Russia, economically slow, is helping out to a certain extent by drawing upon goods accumulated before the revolution, and also by the wretched working of the machinery of distribution which has until now offered the advantage of checking consumption and delaying exhaustion of supplies.

NEED OF OUTSIDE HELP

But, since this exhaustion is ever less distant, one understands how all the efforts of the Soviet Government tend toward the resumption of political and commercial relations abroad. The assistance of other people is becoming ever more urgent.

It is just as well, however, to nourish no illusions about the resumption of exports from Russia. Her transportation system is disorganised and internal necessities may outweigh international pledges; thus, for example 32,000 quintals of grain ready for us at Khersn had to be withdrawn to supply the armies that were constrained to enter the field against Wrangel.

Another illusion no less necessary to avoid is that the present order in Russia is near to final dissolution. The gravity of economic conditions, visible above all in the cities, does not take away the fact that certain conquests of the revolution have become fixed in the minds of the people. Thus, as has already been pointed out, is explained the resistance of the peasants to any reactionary attack against the present regime. The reactionaries have always announced themselves as restorers of the great estates, while the revolution has had the practical effect in the country of constituting small estates which, as a matter of fact, are transmitted by heredity from father to son.

The realisation of communism in the rural districts, is one of the aspirations of the Bolsheviki. This is why the Social Revolutionists, who admit small ownership, are more influential among the peasants. But the Bolshevik Government is of iron and defends itself with every weapon against the opposition of other parties. Even by this route it is difficult to foresee a dissolution of the regime. The Communists, who as a party are not more than 600,000 out of a total population of 160,000,000, have made themselves masters of all political and economic organisations.

LABOR UNIONS

The Bolshevik Constitution grants to the cities one representative in the Soviet Parliament for every 25,000 workingmen; but to the country districts, which are under the influence of the Social Revolutionists, is granted one representative for every 125,000 farmers, which means that in Russia one workingman is worth politically five farmers.

The other parties, Social Revolutionists and Mensheviki, the latter of which have twenty-eight representatives out of the 1,200 who form the Parliament of the Soviets, all of which are in the hands of the Bolsheviki, are badly tolerated and they are prohibited from any propaganada of from publishing newspapers.

It is important to see what are the relations between the labor union organisations, the political party and the State. Here one of the most noteworthy experts of the Russian revolution appears. The labor unions (sidicati) are not in principle obligatory, but are considered as organs of the economic reconstruction. Step by step as this takes place and as society becomes normally organised, the direction of the State should diminish until finally it disappears; thus, while in the first stage of the revolution it is the State that forms and directs the organs of production and distribution, its functions will little by little be turned over to the labor unions. Then these themselves will become the organs of economic life. In this way the separation between the Communist Party, which has the political power, and the labor unions will be purely transitory and the final outcome of the Bolshevist revolution would be real and true syndicalism.

In the meantime the control of the factories, which even before the Bolsheviki came into power had been realised here and there under the form of a disorderly and ruinous invasion of workingmen into the direction of individual industries, has become syndical and is manifesting itself through a network of organisations, with the Central Union or the General Confederation of Labor at its head.

Musical Matters -:- By Ronald B. Hurry

Correspondents wishing to draw attention to Musical Matters, or to ask questions, should address the writer, care of THE CHINA PRESS, enclosing real names and addresses, not necessarily for publication.

The risks to be taken in writing about anything are greatly increased when the subject is an art. In talking or writing about music the chances of conveying anything truthful at all are ridiculously small. (I haye my own and the Editor's sanction to begin in this manner occasionally, so long as there is not too much of it).

My present trouble is that I find myself using the word "feeling," about a player or a composition, in many different senses. On referring to American and European musicial writings, it seems that critics are doing the same thing every day—a matter of the exigencies of an English vocabulary and the necessity to avoid explanations of every other word or so.

But just now there is a further confusion about feeling and emotion in relation to music that looks as if writers, critics, composers and players are about to be split into two irreconcilable camps; into sides more bitterly opposed than any of the old distinctions of 'intellectuals' versus 'romantics.' The new divergence of opinion strikes at the very roots of music and of other arts; for it is an oppositin on the very fundamentals of music.

It appears that not only is "feeling" (or emotion) used as interchangeable with emotionalism, and even as synonymous with imperfectly controlled passion—a thing which is anyhow the very negation of art—but a war is being waged on the theories as to whether or not expression of emotion in its deeper senses is properly to be exalted in a composer or executant as his highest function or a function of art at all!

The playinig of the great violinist, Heifets has been the occasion for a sharp delineation in the opposed camps. Heresy is not in these days a thing to be shunned like the plague, and, heresy or not, the expression of shocking theories attracts a good deal of attention.

Discussion as to whether the emotional faculties are properly distinguishable from the intellectual, aesthetic, and imaginative would probably be a highly technical affair; and most of us think it is a question of the balance of these, (and not a matter of separation of what are in nature inseparable) if we are to keep our sense of a complete art.

We should clear up matters a little if we could convince the mass of artistically inclined people that a display of primitive emotion, of uncontrolled, elemental passion is essentially inartistic, like losing one's temper. It is rude in the old and better sense of the word; and art is not rude. At the two poles, sentimentality and unfeeling, meaningless display are opposite forms of artistic degradation.

Feeling, like actual substances, has to be refined before it can have any value; refinements are things not obvious to the coarse-grained observer or listener.

Aspects of beauty may be as diverse as the loveliness of diamond facets, the curve of a shell, the mystery of a starless night, or—anything that looks beautiful when viewed in a certain light. The illimitable capacities of the human spirit, courage, powers of the mind and the soul as well as beauty of body are all in the province of the art of music.

And, it must come to this, that on one can know or can possibly have experienced what every kind of music means. Some may be beneath our notice, but a great deal more is beyond us; so that our interpretation is likely to be wide of the mark.

But we have the artist to tell us of the flights of the spirit in regions we have not even guessed. The critic who will not learn from the artist to follow a little way, endeavoring to take others along wih him becomes a pedant who stifles inspiration, who would limit the artist's variety and liberty of interpretation—(a very different thing to license).

The dogmatist who settles once and for all, to his own satisfaction, what lies behind and beyond sense impressions and appearances is no longer taken seriously in religion: in art he is just as much in the way.

In any view of the artist there is always a harsh discrepancy between his message and the occasion of its delivery. The sense of this is what makes our concerts and picture galleries appear so crude. The social importance of a concert is out of proportion to the inwardness (and upwardness) of the artist's utterance. I suppose the vanity so often observed in performers is founded on their realisation of this, (for quite the worst may think their art almost a sacred thing.

Granting that feeling and emotion, in some sort, not too narrowly or crudely understood, have to be conveyed by the artist and felt by the hearer, it seems that this is not always the feeling dominating the composer. When I said the other day that litle Mischa Weibrod, at fourteen or fifteen, has feeling for Tchaikovsky and Glazounov in their great violin works, it is not intended to mean, indeed it is better that it should not mean that he goes through the spiritual agonies of one or the fine-drawn intellectualities of the other, or the mixture of these in both. These are characteristics of the music and not the music itself.

Mischa Elman's appearance here will be an opportunity for us to see how far one with great natural gifts allows emotion to sway his imaginative musical sense and purely musical feeling. This and much more, of course. But what chiefly interests me at the moment is whether this artist, an undoubted genius, tends to interpret beauty in terms of abstract musical language or in terms of human emotion, as his experience of both one and the other has been widened and deepened.

The spiritual law which music expresses would seem to be the preservation of a just balance between these, a balance that sways this way and that in the case of individual artists and composers. We may leave the analysis of emotions and the origins of aesthetic feeling to the biologists and to those societies whose business it seems to be to pierce beyond the veil of knowledge; a veil which the artists lift an inch or two for us in odd moments.

A word as to the supposed simplicity of the critic's job. One such, not long ago said that he never made anything of Debussy's "Peleas et Melisande" till he returned from hospital after a bad smash, and now it is vividly alive and interesting to him. (I can well believe that there are other less sensitive dogmatists who would do well to get in a smashup now and then). Again, M. Cortot, the great French pianist, prints a "program" to the Twenty-five Preludes of Chopin. Probably no other pianist alive would accept Cortot's mind-piictures of these pieces, and one is at liberty to make his own if he can. It is the man with no sort of ideas about them that we don't want at any price.

The critic has just the same right, no more no less, to object that everyone an inch shorter than himself is too small and everybody over his height too tall, as he has to say that "So-and-so is too intellectual." "Thingummy is too romantic." Artists do not commonly treat the critic to this kind of retort pointing out his precise stature. More's the pity. Some share of humility and a real sincerity in the make-up of both artist and critic—who is often just an artist 'gone wrong'—does neither any of them any harm, and may be an immense gain to music.

Bolshevism In Russia Condemned

tions of workingmen are proceeding without any a priori formulas. In economic matters it is always the Confederation of Labor that decides, in accord with the Party; in political matters this is reversed. But the Communist Party always rules in the end because of the fact that 80 percent of the directors of the unions are members of the Party. The Mensheviki are at the head of a few organisations of clerks, railroad men and printers.

Among the printers at Moscow and among the metal and textile workers elsewhere strikes broke out recently. It is asserted that these forms of agitation had a political origin, as they were not compatible with the Bolshevist economic system, conditions of work being laid down by the unions in agreement with the political authorities. But it is a fact that strikes do take place, and this also demonstrates that the forms of the old economic system are not yet entirely superseded.

Strikes as a means of economic struggle should not take place any more if the characteristic aspiration of the unionist movement to transform the unions into fundamental organs of the social organism, not on a political but on an economic basis, had been realised. This is the grandiose unionist conception of the Russian revolution. The labor unions ought to survive the Communist Party and even the Soviets, both of these being the expression of a transitory state of affairs characterised by the dictatorship of the proletariat to arrive at the abolition of classes within a society that would at last have found its own social and economic balance.

For a day or so the corn remains, getting looser and looser and without a twinge from it. Then, it gets so loose that you just lift it right off, without even feeling it, and cast it away. That's how easily and simply "Gets-It" disposes of the corn nuisance.

than a contract between the United States and Great Britain to direct and control world affairs.

Any one who was in Britain before the Paris conference, in the French capital during that momentous session, knows that no effort, large or small, was neglected by the British to associate themselves with America and America with themselves in an Anglo-Saxon firm to control and regulate world affairs, in the interests of peace, in the direction of moderation and order undeniably, but not less in accordance with British conceptions, which did not for a single moment contemplate any sacrifice of British policy, either by concessions in the matter of the "freedom of the seas" or surrenders in the case of the German colonies conquered by the British armies.

There was no actual bargain between the President and the British; there was no implied bargain, but so skillful was British diplomacy at Paris that within a few weeks after the President arrived, it was plain that no one of the issues on which British ambitions might be curtailed would be raised by him and, by contrast, he would have British support both for his abstract ideas and for the curtailment of the ambitions of all other countries, whenever they conflicted with Wilson's abstract ideas.

More than this, where Wilson did not perceive an actual conflict between his principles and a national aspiration of a European power but this aspiration conflicted with a British purpose, as in the case of the Polish corridor, Lloyd George very skillfully roused the President by the covert hint that he was proving disloyal to his own program. During the war Britain had made many bargains, "secret treaties" with her European allies, notably with France and with Italy; these bargains represented concessions on the part of the British in recognition of the efforts of her allies, but not one of them contained benefits to Britain. Therefore, while ostensibly standing by the written agreement, the British tacitly encouraged the President to oppose the French in the Sarre and the Italians on the Adriatic.

As the Paris conference developed it became more and more an Anglo-Saxon affair. The hopes and interests of the various continental nations were ruthlessly examined with reference to their accord or lack of accord with the fourteen points. More and more the British and American delegates came to work in complete accord. Day by day the resentment of the continental nations mounted, but they stood at all times helpless in the presence of the combined financial, military and naval resources of the only two Western nations who emerged from the war with unshaken strength.

Now, once for all, it is essential for the American public to recognise that British statesmanship will not, without having first exhausted the resources which it possesses, and they are enormous, surrender the advantages which accrued to them in Paris and must accrue to them always from a partnership between the United States and themselves, which rests upon a document framed by themselves in the main which already, at Paris, assured them of American recognition of substantially all that they desired to obtain at the peace settlement and usefully interposed American vote to all of the aspirations of their European neighbors, which for moral or material reasons aroused their disapprobation.

I am not undertaking to assert that the British policy was totally dictated by selfish and material considerations. On the contrary, there was and there remains a very widespread feeling among liberal Englishmen that the partnership of the United States and Great Britain represents for both, aside from material benefits, a thing worthy desirable in itself and best calculated to preserve the peace of the world. My own experience leads me to believe that in the whole there are more Englishmen unselfishly friendly to the United States than vice versa. But this sentiment, this British liking for the United States, while it colored the whole surface of the waters at Paris, did not control, could not and cannot control. British policy as contrasted with British sentiment is cool, calculating, if Lloyd George is mercurial, an opportunist, the ablest diagnostician of the passing currents of public opinion in his own country, superior in maneuver to every statesman of any other state whom he has encountered during the war or since—behind Lloyd George lies the tradition and the fact of the ablest diplomacy in the world.

We may be certain, then, that just as at the moment when it was announced that President Wilson was coming to Europe and that his main purpose was to establish a league of nations, Lord Robert Cecil, General Smuts, Lord Eustice Percy and a score of other English statesmen set out to frame the covenant of a league of nations which would satisfy the President and accord with British interests, an equally astute association of Britons are already at work seeking to perform the same service for President-elect Harding. And the main idea, after all, will be to save in the new document what was gained in the last.

But what beyond all else did that document assure? In practice even more than in phrase it consolidated American relations with Great Britain in such fashion as to eliminate all chance of Anglo-American disputes. This was negative, but not unimportant. In addition, it associated the United States with the British in almost every dispute between British and continental conceptions of a proper peace settlement; it brought us, with British support, to veto French hopes for security on the Rhine; it led us, at British instance, to deny Poland a real outlet upon the sea; it encouraged us to stand against Italy in the Adriatic.

Insensibly Wilson was led to feel that he had become the moral arbiter of the world and he flung himself with ever growing insistence against the statesmen of the various continental nations, great and small, whose legitimate or illegitimate aspirations conflicted with his abstract principles. I wish to be quite fair in the statement of the case. In perhaps a majority of instances Wilson's stand conformed with the facts in the case. I still believe, after all the partisan debates in this country, that his presence in Paris contributed materially to making the several settlements more moderate than they would otherwise have been.

But the difficulty always lay in the fact that in each specific instance the United States was hurled against a friendly state. We undertook to regulate the frontiers of Poland and of Rumania; we told the Italians they should not have Fiume and Dalmatia; we denied the Greeks Eastern Thrace—to which they were entitled. Finally we were compelled in the end through the President to undertake to establish our right to rule, by giving guarantees of the frontiers of the several states, whose aspirations or solicitudes for security or integrity we disappointed. Thus we gave France the treaty of alliance, which has not been ratified, and we gave Rumania and Serbia the assurances of May 31, which, although denied, cannot be disproved.

We were thus involved, entangled in the whole welter of European disputes, and the more we became entangled the closer became the association between Britain and the United States, both because Britain approved of our undertakings to restrict the appetites of British neighbors and because we in no instance undertook to exercise a similar restraining influence upon British desires which were no more nor less praiseworthy than those of Poland or France, Italy or Greece, but merely conflicted less obviously with Wilson's conceptions. More and more we became isolated from all other nations in Paris, who openly resented our opposition to their hopes, and as we became isolated Anglo-American solidarity quite naturally increased.

From the Paris conference Great Britain emerges the only actual gainer, since, speaking comparatively, what she desired she obtained unconditionally, while the profits of all her allies were contingent upon a variety of circumstances. This was in part due to the fact that the things the British desired were obtained by the war, namely, the extinction of the German rivalry on the seas, both in the case of the war and commercial navies, and the acquisition of most of the German colonies. Security was thus absolutely attained, whereas security for other states could in the nature of things be only problematical, while compensation for destructions, mainly suffered by Continental states which had been invaded, was bound to be a matter of years.

But the second department of British policy, disclosed when the Paris conference had at last adjourned, the purpose to get Germany and Russia back on their feet, lacking the assistance of the United States, since President Wilson failed before Congress and the country, has so far made no progress. It has made no progress because inevitably interwoven with this British purpose was the necessity to reduce the demands made by France upon Germany, to force Poland to surrender to Bolshevist demands and, in general, while in no particular modifying British gains resulting from the common victory, to compel all other victorious nations to make substantial sacrifices, or, what seemed to them substantial sacrifices. I am aware that the main British contention with respect of the French claims against Germany is that only by reduction to reasonable limits can these claims result in any payments. But the French do not accept this view, and may be entitled to their own view, at the least.

Now the chief purpose of all continental diplomacy at the present moment is and must remain for a long time to enlist American support for their own views of what is a proper settlement in Europe and particularly with respect of Russia and of Germany. Had we stayed in Europe the British are confident—and I think justly confident—that we should have taken the British view in the case of Germany and even in the matter of Russia, where Lloyd George might have been depended upon to sway Wilson as he did in the matter of Danzig. But we quit Europe and the whole British policy shipwrecked against the solid resistance of France. There has been a deadlock ever since and the deadlock subsists, and can only be broken perhaps, by an American declaration in support of French or British policy. To prevent the former, to obtain the latter, this is British policy henceforth. To this end British statesmen will seek to lead President-elect Harding and shape his conceptions of a world association as contrasted with the league of nations.

Slayer Of R. F. Hazelton Given Life Imprisonment

o'clock a cabaret and dance hall known as the "El Dorado." There more drinks were ordered but whether consumed by the accused is a subject of dispute. At any rate the accused soon showed that he was under the influence of liquor.

Before leaving the ship he had borrowed from the first assistant engineer a revolver as he testifies "for protection" and because he had known of a shipmate being "blackjacked" at a French port. With this in his pocket he and his companion left the table where they were first seated in the cabaret and went to another table where the accused sat down and seized the right hand of one of the occupants and afterward the latter's fingers which he twisted forcibly. A scuffle ensued as the result of which the party whom the accused assailed fell against the stove with the accused on top. When attention was called to his gun he said "Yes and I know how to use it."

HAZLELTON, PEACE MAKER

While the struggle was in progress the party now deceased who had been seated at a table some distance away came and intervened finally inducing the accused to go with him to his own table where the accused sat down for a short time. The party now deceased then led him from the hall into the cloakroom where according to the dying declaration of the deceased and also the testimony of the three Chinese cloakroom boys, the accused who had preceded the deceased suddenly drew the revolver from his pocket, wheeled around and shot the deceased in the stomach from the effects of which he died a few days later. The report of the shot brought many occupants of the hall to the door and the accused was first seen standing over the body of the deceased with the revolver in his hand. Later he left the cloakroom going first into a lavatory from which there was no egress except that by which he entered and later going rapidly down the stairs and out of the building. There he stood for a time in a doorway and later was found wandering in a vacant lot some distance away from the scene of the tragedy. He was then taken in charge by some American naval men and later arrested by the Municipal police and incarcerated in the police station.

MURDER COMMITTED

While the foregoing facts are not expressly admitted by the defense they are established by practically undisputed evidence and that they show the commission of the crime of murder is not seriously questioned. The chief controversy in the argument was as to the degree of the crime. For the accused is prosecuted under the following provision:

"Murder is the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought. Every murder perpetrated by poison, lying in wait, or any other kind of willful, deliberate, malicious, and premeditated killing; or committed in the perpetration of, or attempt to perpetrate, any arson, rape, burglary, or robbery; or perpetrated from a premeditated design unlawfully and maliciously to effect the death of any human being other than him who is killed, is murder in the first degree. Any other murder is murder in the second degree."

For the latter the law authorises no more than imprisonment for life while for the first degree capital punishment is prescribed.

The defense contends that none of the qualifying circumstances necessary to raise the crime to the first degree have been proved beyond a reasonable doubt. There was certainly no "poison, lying in wait, or any other kind of killing . . . committed in the perpetration of or atempt to perpetrate any" other crime. Was there, then, "willful, deliberate, malicious and premeditated killing" or one "perpetrated from a premeditated design"?

FURBUSH INTOXICATED

The accused claims that shortly after he entered the dance hall and sat down at the table he lost consciousness and remembers nothing of the affair at the other table, the struggle which ensued or the subsequent events until the explosion which was evidently that of the revolver. There is evidence on the part of the prosecution's witnesses which tends to corroborate this claim of the accused as regards his condition. The party whom he assailed at the other table says that the accused when he came there was "apparently under the influence of liquor." Another witness for the prosecution, to whose truthfulness both sides pay tribute, says that the accused, when first observed by him seemed "sufficiently drunk to want to cause trouble." Still another of the prosecution's witnesses declares that "sometimes he did seem a little bit dazed" and the bar boy who served the accused states that the latter when at the table "hung his head down and did not utter a word" crouching in the position of one who lacked control of himself.

There are other indications that the accused's condition just before the shooting was at normal if not irresponsible. Depositions of certain shipmates received in evidence without objection describe him as of quiet and peaceful disposition while as we have seen almost his first act on entering the dance hall was to provoke an altercation. Again the victim selected as the object of his drunken fury was not one who would have been chosen by "premeditated design." The deceased was a perfect stranger to the accused but had shown him nothing but friendliness and kindness, leading him quietly from the scene of the affray to his own table and thence to the cloakroom where the tragedy occurred. Of all those with whom the accused came in contract that evening the deceased was the last one who would have been attacked by a normal man.

NO MOTIVE FOR DEED

There was absolutely no provocation or other motive for the deed and while this in a way aggravates the character of the offence it likewise heightens the improbability that the same was "willful, deliberate and premeditated." In a case relied on by the prosecution the accused in a drunken frenzy shot the policeman who interfered in a quarrel between the accused and his wife. The verdict there was murder in the second degree but there was much more of a motive than in this case.

Nor do we think that the circumstances relied upon to show premeditation greatly alter the case. The accused's remark that he had a gun and knew how to use it would seem to be merely an expression of the truculent attitude which drunkenness would produce and the same might be said of the change of expression, mentioned by the deceased in his dying declaration, on the part of the accused just before the shooting. The flight of the accused and his failure to account for the absence of the revolver afford greater indication of design on his part, but this was after the explosion which he says he remembers and which evidently brought him somewhat to his senses though not fully for he was, according to several witnesses, in a dazed condition even at the police station.

PREVIOUS HABITS GOOD

As to the cause of the accused's condition just before the shooting we are unable to find in the evidence any other adequate explanation than alcoholism. It is, indeed, shown that the accused had an abrasion over his left eye but while he says he thought he had been struck there is no evidence either as to the cause or the effects of the wound to which we could give much weight.

But according to the undisputed testimony, before reaching the Eldorado, he had one drink at the Tivoli, two at the Savoy, one or part of one, at a Chinese brothel and three at the Astor Grill, making seven in all. According to his testimonials and the depositions of his shipmates his previous habits had been temperate while his naval record for sobriety was about the highest and according to a medical witness called by both sides the effect of excessive drinking on one of such habits would be more severe than upon an habitual drinker.

Now drunkenness is one of the conditions which may exclude that "premeditated design" which the law prescribes in order to constitute murder in the first degree. As was said by an eminent judge in a well considered decision:

"It will frequently happen, necessarily, when the killing is of such a character as the common law designates as murder, and it has not been perpetrated by means of poison, or by lying in wait, that it will be a vexed question whether the killing has been the result of sudden passion, produced by a cause inadequate to mitigate it to man-slaughter, but still sufficient to mitigate it to murder in the second degree, if it be really the true cause of the excitement, or whether it has been the result of deliberation and premeditation; and in all such cases whatever fact is calculated to cast light upon the mental status of the offender is legitimate proof; and, among others, the fact that he was at the time drunk, not that this will excuse or mitigate the offence if it were done wilfully, deliberately, maliciously, and premeditatedly (which it might well be, though the perpetrator was drunk at the time), but to show that the killing did not spring from a premeditated purpose, but sudden passion, excited by inadequate provocation, such as might reasonably be expected to arouse sudden passion and heat to the point of taking life without premeditation and deliberation. This distinction never can exist except between murder in the first and murder in the second degree under our statute. . . . . .

In ascertaining the fact of such intention, all the concomitant circumstances shall be heard, in order to enable the jury to judge whether such deliberate, wilful, malicious, and premeditated design existed."

Moreover

"The intoxication need not be to the extent of depriving the accused of all power of volition or of all ability to form an intent."

"All that should be required of the defendant is to introduce such evidence of the fact, that, at the time he inflicted the fatal injuries, he was so deeply intoxicated as to be incapable of forming in his mind a deliberate premeditated design to do the killing, as will raise in the minds of the jurors a reasonable doubt as to such fact, in order to reduce the grade of the offense to murder in the second degree."

DRUNKENESS NO EXCUSE

A review of the whole evidence leaves us with a reasonable doubt, which it is our duty as a trier of the facts to resolve in the accused's favor, that when he fired the shot he was capable of that "willful, deliberate and premeditated design" to kill the accused which the Penal Code prescribes.

But while intoxication may thus be considered in determining the grade of the crime it constitutes, when voluntary, by an equally well settled rule, no excuse for the crime itself. Nor, even had it been proved, which it was not, that the liquors consumed by the accused contained other poisonous ingredients than alcohol, would his crime thereby have been justified. That was one of the risks which he took in consuming the liquor and, good or bad, he was fully responsible for any crime which he actually committed while under its influence though not of course for one which it rendered him incapable of committing. As was well said by the late Justice Lamor when still Judge of the Supreme Court of Georgia:

"There was no evidence on which to charge as to the effect of drugging the ale alleged to have been used by the defendant, nor can the courts establish a precedent which would authorise a a chemical investigation as to whether the liquor was good or bad, pure or impure, drugged, or containing only malt, spirituous, or vinous qualities. Drunkenness voluntarily produced by one sort of liquor is no more an excuse for crime than that caused by any other kind of intoxicating drink."

And having given the accused the full benefit of the reasonable doubt above mentioned we can not again apply it in fixing the penalty. There being no other extenuating circumstances the maximum punishment must be imposed.

SENTENCED FOR LIFE

We find the accused guilty of the crime of murder in the second degree and he is accordingly sentenced to imprisonment for life to be served in Bilibid Prison, Manila Territory of the Philippines, until duly transferred to some other lawful place of confinement in the United States. He is further adjudged to pay the costs of this prosecution.

RAISING FUNDS FOR PORTRAIT OF PRESIDENT POTT

St. John's Alumni Starts Drive For $2,500 To Pay For Painting

During the week a St. John's University Committee has issued an appeal for $2,500 Chinese currency, to be used to pay for the portrait of Dr. Pott which is now being painted in America. The portrait is to hang in Anniversary Hall to serve as a reminder to succeeding generations of St. John's students that Anniversary Hall was given to the university on the completion of Dr. Pott's twenty-fifth year as president of St. John's and as a tribute to Dr. Pott's services to the school.

The portrait is to be the gift to the university of alumni, students, faculty members and all friends of the university and of Dr. Pott. If the campaign is carried out as now planned, every person who contributes to the President's Portrait Fund will receive an excellent print of the portrait as an acknowledgment of his share in the gift.

The committee is composed of alumni, Dr. T. K. M. Siao and K. F. Chang, students, L. S. Lieu and J. D. Liang, and faculty members, H. F. MacNair and C. F. Remer, with Mr. Remer as chairman.

Berlin's Visitors Flee As Hotels Shut Down

Restaurants Closing Also Because Of Police Raids To Catch Profiteers

Berlin, Dec. 15.—The hotels of Berlin are emptying and the outgoing trains are crammed full. The reason is that the visitors fear of the closing down of practically all the restaurants in the city has been justified.

Late last night at a meeting of the Berlin Hotel Proprietors' Association they decided to close their restaurants as from tomorrow morning. The decision affects 145 of Berlin's 300 hotels, and these include all the largest save one. Those not in the association are the very smallest, and many of them, it is believed, will follow suit. Sixty or seventy of the largest wine and beer restaurants apart from the hotels, will close at the same time.

The reason for this drastic move is the action of the police in raiding hotels and restaurants with a view to discovering if they are profiteering in foodstuffs. Thus far the police have been able to obtain little evidence of serious offences.

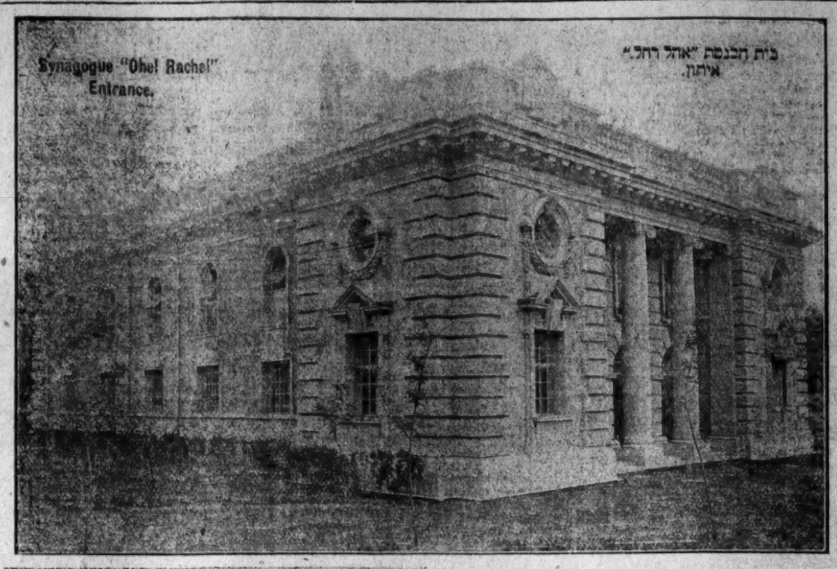
It is reckoned that thus far 10,000 persons have left Berlin on account of the prospect of the restaurants taking this step. Nearly 15,000 restaurant workers will become idle, although the proprietors hope to be able to continue to pay their wages. This will mean a tremendous loss to the city.

During the year the hotels of the city have housed no fewer than a million and a half of strangers. They are a source of wealth to the country and of revenue to the Government. The loss in taxation will be considerable.

Business also will be greatly interfered with. Meetings of numerous associations and companies which had been arranged to be held here have had to be cancelled, and they will meet elsewhere.

One hotel management company which runs several of the hotels and restaurants closed down several days ago. It has a contract to run the restaurant at the Reichstag, and it is proposed to close that together with others it controls, but it is pointed out that the contract did not permit such action, so it has been running the restaurant strictly according to the letter of the law. The members of the Reichstag have been finding their meals of a very humble description and they do not like it.

Consecrate Ohel-Rachel Synagogue Today When Rabbi Hirsch Is To Be Installed; Edifice Erected At Cost Of Tls. 125,000



The New Synagogue, Lady Sassoon, Sir Jacob Sassoon, Bart., and Rabbi W. Hirsch, B. A.

The consecration of the Synagogue, "Ohel-Rachel" on Seymour Road and the installation of the new Minister, Rabbi W. Hirsch, B. A. will take place this afternoon at 4 o'clock. Rabbi Hirsch, who was elected Minister last year, will deliver the installation address and consecration sermon.

The Synagogue which has been erected on Seymour Road at a cost of Taels 125,000 is a magnificent edifice of white concrete and marble and has a seating capacity of 400. The plans, of the structure were drawn by Messrs. Moorhead and Halse, architects, and the building features a large auditorium, a gallery for the ladies, and class rooms for religious study. The Synagogue is steam heated and is surrounded by 15 mow of ground.

NAMED FOR LADY SASSOON

Six years ago the need of a new Synagogue in Shanghai was strongly felt and through the efforts of Mr. Simon A. Levy, the late Sir Jacob Sassoon, Bart., was induced to give an endowment fund for the building. In appreciation of this, the sacred edifice has been named after the memory of the late Lady Sassoon who died in Poona, India in 1911.

The Trustees of the Synagogue consist of: Messrs. Simon A. Levy, D. M. David, Edward I. Ezra, A. Howard, and Edward Nissim.

The Committee of Management is composed of Messrs. D. E. J. Abraham, and Edward I. Ezra, Vice-Presidents: Simon A. Levy, President: A. E. Moses, Hon. Secretary; D. H. Silas, Hon. Treasurer; J. J. Judah and N. E. B. Ezra.

COMES HERE FROM LONDON

The coming of Rabbi Hirsch to Shanghai marks a new epoch in the development of Judaism in China. Members of the Jewish community were elated at the advent of a distinguished Rabbinical leader when he arrived in Shanghai last year.

Before coming to the Orient Rabbi Hirsch was for seven years Minister of the Middlesbrough Jewish Community during which he gained the respect and affection of his members by his devotion to duty and by his eloquence and learning.

and
The National Loan of the Fourth Year of the Republic of China (1915) $24,000,000

On the 6th June, 1917, the undersigned notified subscribers to the above two loans that in pursuance of arrangements made with the Chinese Government, the loan service as regards interest payments would in future be adequately secured.
In regard to the redemption of the loans it was impossible at the time to make any announcement. The Moratorium of 1916 affected the Loan Service, and, although drawings have been proceeded with as funds permitted, Redemption has been irregular and behind the scheduled dates.
Arrangements have now been made which will enable annual drawings of each loan to be undertaken until their extinction, in 1924 in the case of the 4th Year Loan and 1925 in the case of the 3rd Year Loan.
The Ministry of Finance will notify in due course the date of the drawings to take place this year with date and place of repayment.

Inspector General of Customs.

FINAL ANNOUNCEMENT of the Tsin Dah (晉大莊)
and
Wei Dah (會大莊) Banks
The above-mentioned banks have duly paid all accounts due by them by allotment and instalment. Several creditors, however, who should have claimed have not done so. We advertised in the fourth, eighth and ninth moons, in the Shun Pao, Sin Wan Pao, North China Daily News and in this paper, inviting the creditors to draw payment not later than the end of the ninth moon, otherwise they would lose their power to claim, and the funds would be turned over for benevolent purposes. Our liquidating office has been established for years, and, as the end of the Chinese year is approaching, we have abolished it without further waiting, and the funds unclaimed by the creditors have been donated to benevolent causes in accordance with our previous meeting, in order that the matter may be concluded finally. All notes and pass books remaining in the possession of Chinese or foreigners, are hereby declared to be null and void, and the public is hereby requested to note this final declaration.

NOTICE

Butcheries both in the International and French Settlements hereby jointly notify the Public:
Shanghai Butchers usually purchase sheep and calves from the interior of China. In consequence of the recent famine and the high cost of food prices, labour and farm hands in the interior, the raising of cattle and sheep has become difficult, and therefore the supply of meat has decreased in comparision with that of previous years. The price of meat has risen to a much higher price above normal, say, an increase of about 5 to 6 cents per pound.
In spite of the difficulty and high cost of transportation of animals from the interior, and the high price of rice and other foods, Shanghai Butchers sell meat to their customers as cheaply as possible, with the intention of retaining their good connection with customers.
A meeting has been held by all Shanghai Butchers and a resolution passed that an increase or certain prices per pound shall be made on cash sales as well as contracted transactions.
We wish the public to understand that the increase in prices was decided upon only after the most careful consideration and only for necessity's sake.
The following Butchers in the International Settlement will come under the above resolution:
Yue-Shing, The Oxford Butchery, Cosmopolitan, Wei-Zee, Zang-Zoong, Teh-Fong, Yung-Foong, The Hanbury, The Shanghai Butchers, Yun-Kee, Foh-Loong, Zung-Zoong, Ziang-Kee, San-Mow, Yuen-Cheong, Woo-Mei, Yue-Woo, Yao-Tsing-Kee, Zee-Ah-De, Tsen-Kee, Hop-Shing, Dong-Hing, Yah-Foong, North-Hong-Kee, Tsen-Tai, Yung-Tai-Foh, The Asia, San-Tai, and Shing-Mow.
The following Butchers in the French Settlement will come under the above resolution:
Zung-Shing-Kun-Kee, Yung-Sin, Sau-Woo, Zung-Shing-Hop Kee, Yung-Shing-Fau, Hong-Kee, and Dong-Hing.

"BIG BROTHERS" PLANNING TO AID BOY SCOUTS HERE

British And American Lads Have Need Of Assistance

The Boy Scouts, who are about as busy as any body when it comes to helping others, stand in need of a little help themselves.

The Rotary Club of Shanghai, as part of its "Big Brothers" movement, is taking the matter up and is going to see what may be done about it.

Here are some of the things the Scouts—both Baden Powell and groups—want, and ought to have:

The services of several men who will act as instructors in boxing, swimming, first aid work, nature study, cooking, the use of tools and other such matters as are of use and interest to boys.

Also some cups or shields or other trophies which may be used for competition.

The Baden Powell Scouts want a man to train a bugle corps and a number of adult members of the Association at $5 each per annum and a "live" man who will take over the duties of secretary and treasurer.

The American Scouts, who are of more recent organisation here and not yet on such a firm financial basis as their British brothers, need some funds for equipment.

The Rotarians' "Big Brothers" Committee is having a meeting at the Kalee Hotel tomorrow in an effort to solve the problem.

"Ritz" Opens January 29

A new cafe of pretentious extent and luxurious fittings will be added to the list of such establishments here on January 29 when the Ritz is opened at 24 North Honan Road.

The new cafe occupies the remodelled premises which were formerly "The Wheel" and these have been extended and decorated in costly style. There is a huge ballroom, with a balcony where diners may sit, and several other large rooms suitable for large dinner parties or private dancing parties. The whole is finished in expensive fashion. The kitchens, the management states, are large enough to care for a capacity crowd of diners and are equipped after the style of the most modern of Western hotels.

A new jazz band, engaged in Chicago on the recommendation on Ted Lewis, the American "Jazz King," is expected to arrive on the Empress of Asia and will be here for the opening.

The maitre d'hotel, Mr. Charles G. Duront, was formerly at Sherry's in New York City and the chef, Mr. A. E. Hanson, it is stated, was cook to the former German Emperor, leaving when all the Frenchmen connected with the Imperial household were dismissed. He was later at the Continental in Paris and more recently in several famous American cafes.

SCENE IN A TRAM CAR

Editor, THE CHINA PRESS

Dear Sir.—Please kindly publish the following lines in your esteemed paper: On the day before yesterday, at 3:20 p.m. when I got on board a tramcar running from the Garden Bridge Southward, I saw three well-dressed Chinese gentlemen, who were not my acquaintances. I sat next to them. On the opposite side there sat a foreigner of about fifty who was smoking a pipe. Soon a lady entered the car, the said foreigner arose and gave his place to her and stood beside the three Chinese gentlemen.

When our car arrived at the corner of Nanking Road, one of the Chinese gentlemen spat and was suddenly attacked by the foreigner, who gave him a very heavy box on ear At the same time the foreigner asserted that his victim was not qualified to be in the 1st Class room and should be in the 3rd class room only. Such a rude act as this apparently frightened the lady. The victim took no action. The other two gentlemen remained silent too.

I trailed the foreigner to his place of business, and if necessary can identify him.

Of course, spitting indiscriminately is a bad habit, but is personal assault the only remedy? Enclosing my name and address, I am.

A Chinese Spectator.

(Reuter's Service)

Washington, Jan. 21.—Up to the present, President-Elect Harding has made but little progress with regard to Cabinet-making.

The general opinion expressed is that he will be guided in regard to Foreign Affairs by the Senate Committee and will not appoint a Secretary of State without Senator Lodge's approval.

Grenberg who have lived in Shanghai for the past twenty years, will take up the practice of law in Shanghai shortly. Her husband, Dr. Alexander Rosemberg, is expected to arrive in Shanghai in March or April.

When a girl of eighteen she decided to become a lawyer and sailed from Shanghai to Europe where she planned her studies accordingly. She is a graduate of the University of Paris and the University of Rennes and was admitted to the bar at Rennes.

With the opening of the war Madame Rosemberg devoted her time to war work and was in the Financial Liaison Service, American Expeditionary Forces in France at the French Ministry of War. In recognition of her service she was decorated with the Victory Medal.

East Mediterranean Squadron Suppressed Under French Plan

(Reuter's Service)

Paris, Jan. 21.—The suppression of the Eastern Mediterranean Squadron is the outstanding feature of the 1921 naval armaments scheme.

The Mediterranean Squadron will be comprised of four battleships, three battle-cruisers, two squadrons of six torpedo-boats each, and a squadron of eight ex-German torpedo-boats, with a reserve division of three battleships, a battle-cruiser and four torpedo-boats.

The Atlantic Division will comprise two cruisers, and the West African Division a cruiser and two sloops. The Far East Division will remain stationed in the Pacific and Indian Oceans.

JAPANESE JOINING RUSSIANS IN MINE WORK IN KAMCHATKA

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Tokio, (by mail).—A plan is afloat, according to the Tokio Nichi Nichi, for working a gold mine in Kamchatka by Japanese and Russian capitalists as a joint undertaking. The former are being represented by Mr. Mannosuke Nakamura, of Tokio, who hold extensive interests in the coast fishery of the Maritime Province, and the latter by Mr. Yuriev, who holds the Fifth Order of Merit, granted for services to the Japanese Expeditionary Force in Siberia.

"Our scheme is to open up a gold mine in Kamchatka," said Mr. Yuriev." An agreement has already been concluded for this purpose with the Vladivostok Government. The capital will be subscribed equally by the Japanese and Russians concerned, and considerable encouragement has been given to our plan by Mr. Matsudaira, now Chief of the Western Affairs Bureau in the Foreign Office.

"The company will be established by the end of the next month and the work of opening the mine will be started as soon as the ground thaws out."

BISMARCK ALMOST BURNED MEMOIRS

Fact Is Brought Out At Ex-Kaiser's Suit To Prevent Publication Now

DISCLOSURES ARE FEARED

Monarchists Tell Publishers Edition Would Hurt Their Cause

Berlin, Dec. 17.—How Bismarck came near to burning the manuscript of the third volume of his memoirs was told in court here yesterday afternoon. This was when the case was resumed by which the ex-Kaiser is endeavoring to obtain a legal judgment preventing Messrs. Cotta from publishing the book, as it contains private letters which he claims cannot be published without his sanction.

The Judge said that in "the tragic conflict between the old statesman and the young ruler" there was bound to be much straight talk, but as the substance of the volume was now generally known he suggested that publication should be permitted and the proceeds given to charity. This suggestion, however, did not appeal to either side.

Counsel for Messrs. Cotta said the book was written while Bismarck still felt his dismissal deeply and when he was in an understandable bad temper, so it was easy to see why the ex-Kaiser and his partisans did not wish publication. Bismarck made no condition that the book should not be published till after the ex-Kaiser's death. As for the claim of the ex-Kaiser regarding his letters counsel said the letters were not always actually written by him. They were not private letters but State documents. Counsel for the ex-Kaiser charged Messrs. Cotta with being privy to the publication of extracts from the book, the object being to arouse interest and bring about big sales.

The ex-Kaiser claimed the letters as his. They were, said counsel, "written in that well-known style which is peculiar to his Majesty."

Bismarck on one occasion when talking about the matter with his son, expressed doubts as to the wisdom of publishing the book during William's life time and wondered if the best thing to do was to burn the manuscript.

On another occasion he said that if the third volume were published people would say "Ah, there it all comes out from the grave, what a repulsive old man Bismarck was."

An interesting point in the proceedings was the admission by the ex-Kaiser's counsel that monarchists recently approached Messrs. Cotta with a view to persuading them not to publish the book at present. "They laid special stress," said counsel, "on that fact that publication would do great harm to the monarchist cause."

SOVIET NOTE NOT WORTH PAPER

Smallest Currency Printed Is 10,000 Ruble Bill, Now Equal To About 20 Cents

New York, Dec. 18.—The plight of Samuel Hopwood, one of the Americans who finally gained release from Russia last October and who is now in England with one of his daughters recovering from illness caused by his sufferings, was told yesterday by Oscar L. Richard, a member of the firm of C. B. Richard and Co. 29 Broadway, who met Mr. Hopwood in the Hotel de Rome in Riga the day he arrived and helped him to get in touch with American officials.

One of Mr. Hopwood's daughters was left behind at the Russian frontier because the Soviet agents there said there was a flaw in her passport. Mr. Hopwood was so ill he had to go on and leave her to follow as best she could, and Mr. Richard does not know whether she has yet been able to leave the country.

"I met the Hopwoods in the hotel where the Bolshevist-Polish Peace Conference was being held," said Mr. Richard. "As I came down the stairs one morning I saw a young woman sitting on a pile of luggage, and someone told me she was an American. She and her father, both weak from their privations, had tried to get rooms in the hotel, but the place was so full of peace delegates and their retinues that they could not be accommodated.

BUTTER 6,300 RUBLES

"I offered them my services and gave Mr. Hopwood letters to Evan E. Young, United States Commissioner, and to the American Consul, John B. Hurley. Mr. Hopwood had been trying to get out of Russia since 1918, but the Soviet authorities found pretexts for detaining him until he developed tuberculosis from lack of food.

"They told me that it made them perfectly dizzy to see all the shops open in Riga. Even though that formerly prosperous city has now been reduced almost to industrial stagnation, the contrast with Moscow was startling. The people all seemed dressed compared with those in Moscow, who went around in rags. The last Winter they were there the shoes Miss Hopwood wore were made out of a kodak case and a velvet scarf. Butter could only be had for 6,300 rubles a pound; clothes and furniture that could be spared went for food. In Winter they spent most of the time in bed to keep warm, for there was no coal and little wood.

"Miss Hopwood had been forced to take a pickaxe and chop ice from the rails, her protest that she was an American citizen being disregarded, as were the protests of other Americans and nationals of other countries. She had to do the work assigned to her or go without food, she was told; as long as she was in Russia she had to do as the Russian women did.

"She showed me a 10,000 Soviet ruble note, on which was printed a stipulation that the person using it should make Soviet propaganda. She exchanged it at a bank for 30 Lettish rubles, which are worth about 20 cents. I learned in Riga that no bank notes under 10,000 rubles are now being printed by the Soviet because of the lack of paper and the fact that the paper is worth more than the face value of the note.

HOPE FOR AMERICAN AID

"While in Riga I called on the Premier, the Foreign Minister and other State officials. They are all hopeful that economic rehabilitation will come to the new Baltic countries. They are not Bolshevist; they hate Bolshevism. They hope to be recognised by the United States and to have credit granted them. The recently announced plan of economic aid by the League of Nations is the plan the Baltic States hope will be applied to them. They are willing to hypothecate their railroads, their customs, to get credit with which to buy raw materials. For, although their factories are dismantled, the homes of their workers in ruins and the workers themselves supported by the State, they believe that with raw materials they could get on a firm financial basis.

"Living for an American is ridiculously cheap. I had a large room in a hotel, splendidly furnished, with breakfast served in my room, for the equivalent of 45 cents of our money. And the Poles complained of the high cost of living, and said it was only half as much in Warsaw. I went to the national opera one night and occupied a box with three other persons for about one dollar."

Newly Rich Flout Poverty In Berlin

Woman's Dog Gets Perfumed Baths And Steak; A Sharp Contrast

Berlin, Dec. 15.—Describing the contrast between distress and direst need among the masses and the orgies of extravagance of the newly rich, the Vorwarts prints the following among several reports furnished by a waiter at the Hotel Adlon:

"Room 279-80—The male guest, most offensive war profiteer type, wears only silk underwear, and diamonds on his fingers like an Indian Prince. He pays 250 marks daily for two rooms.

"His female companion, recently arrived from Switzerland, is even more extravagant, spending 130 marks every morning for perfumes mixed with her bath. Their luncheons and breakfasts, served in their rooms, comprise six or seven dishes, three kinds of wine at each meal, costing 100 to 1,000 marks.

"Her dog gets a perfumed bath every second day and a whole beefsteak every noon costing 45 marks. Evenings the dog gets a pint of milk and some chocolate.

"A few days ago the male guest bought his female companion a fur coat for 60,000, silk underwear for 85,000, and eight costumes for 92,000 marks."

The Vorwarts comments that such extravagance is typical at the large Berlin hotels and restaurants, and approve the authorities' drastic suppression of such scandal; which is only too well calculated in these times to incite the masses against the classes.

Nevertheless, some thirty of the best hotels and restaurants struck today, or will strike tomorrow, as a demonstration against the so-called cake law. The authorities, however, declare they will remain firm, because the unparalleled action of the hotel and restaurant keepers is only a fight for unlimited meat, milk and butter, the only three food articles still rationed, and that they cannot permit caterers to deprive children of milk to give to persons such as are described as living in Room 279-80.

How 3 Boys Accomplished the World's Biggest Robbery

Famous Exploits of the Most Expert Bank Burglars and Train Robbers Surpassed by Unarmed, Inexperienced Youngsters Who Stripped a Mail Car of $3,500,000 and Burned Bushels of Bonds

"While Merle Phillips chatted with the engineer, thus diverting his attention, the other two boys threw out the registered mail sacks at the selected place, and as soon as the train moved on they were piled into the hidden and waiting automobile."

IT is forty years since "Jimmy" Hope and his gang emptied the vaults of a Broadway New York bank of $2,700,000 in money and securities. Up to comparatively a few days ago that exploit, known as "The Great Manhattan Bank Robbery," held the record in all the criminal history of the world as the largest single robbery of any kind.

But on the evening of November 13 three Omaha boys, whose leader was only seventeen years old, pushed "Jimmy" Hope's record far in the shade by looting a mail car of more than $3,500,000 worth of money and securities!

The details of the simple method by which these three boys accomplished the world's biggest robbery makes, when contrasted with the elaborate technique not only of "Jimmy" Hope, but a score of other "Old Masters," one of the most interesting and extraordinary chapters in criminal history.

And first the Omaha exploit, which has set the police of the world by the ears. Merle Philips was a mail sorter in the railroad transfer station at Council Bluffs, right across the river from Omaha. He is a little over seventeen, a brother, a year younger, worked with him. Merle, knowing the costly contents of many of the sacks that went through his hands, began to wonder how he could make those contents his own. He and his brother took into their confidence an eighteen-year-old friend, a certain Fred Poffenbarger. It was the latter, the authorities say, who worked out the details of the plot.

The three decided to "make their killing" on the night of Saturday, November 13. Young Poffenbarger enlisted the services of a friend, Keith Collins, who had been in the aviation service. On that night ten sacks of registered mail were taken off a Union Pacific train and placed on a Chicago, Burlington & Quincy train for Chicago, where they were to be again transferred to New York. When the C., B. & Q. engine steamed away Merle Philips was in the cab, having asked the engineer for a ride from the transfer station to the passenger station at Council Bluffs.

Hanging on the baggage car in which had been placed the registered mail were Orville Philips and young Poffenbarger. They broke the window of the side door, opened it, and while Merle chatted with the engineer, thus diverting his attention, they threw out the sacks at a selected place. And as soon as the train moved on they were piled into a waiting automobile at whose wheel sat Keith Collins.

The suspicions of the engineer had been aroused by Merle, however, and upon his information he was arrested. He confessed. The other two boys gave themselves up, but Keith Collins fled.

The magnitude of their loot when they opened the bags had stunned them, the boys said. In one sack was $800,000 worth of Liberty bonds and French bonds. All these they burned, with other hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of securities, stocks and even currency. Out of all the $3,500,000 the police recovered only $23,460 in currency, $1,050 in bonds and three diamond brooches. All the rest of the loot had either been destroyed or was in the hands of the missing chauffeur of the robber car. Later Keith Collins was caught in Oklahoma with one suitcase of bills still in his possession.

Very different from the casualness of this exploit and its prompt discovery was the achievement of "Jimmy" Hope, which gave him the laurels of criminality the three boys have just snatched away. No more extraordinary and picturesque burglary than that has ever been performed.

Hope corrupted Patrick Shevelin, watchman of the Manhattan Bank, by promising him a quarter of a million dollars.

This was only the first step. The steel safes which held the millions in currency and securities were inside a vault. This vault was supposed to be not only burglar proof, but mob proof. Besides that, its door, with its big combination lock, was in plain view of the street, and while Shevelin could give Hope and his band entrance it was impossible for them to step out in such plain view to study the opening mechanism.

A woman of Hope's band was dressed in tip-top fashion and went to the bank to open an account. She found a way to note the make and the date of the mighty combination lock on the massive steel doors.

Hope, who had a mechanical genius in a man known as "Western George" Howard, secured a lock precisely similar. In a few days Howard found that he could open it by the simple procedure of drilling a small hole just below it, inserting a wire and turning the tumblers. Hope watched the demonstration, and being a stickler for detail insisted upon seeing whether it would work at the Manhattan Bank before proceeding with the robbery. But while the gang was waiting for a convenient occasion for the experiment, Howard was murdered! Hope decided he would have to do without Howard, and with another of his men, Johnny Dobbs, was admitted by Shevelin one night to put Howard's theory into practice. They bored a hole about the diameter of a .22-calibre bullet under the lock and inserted a wire. Back fell the tumblers, and the vault's doors opened!

But this was only a reconnaissance, and the two burglars were careful to disturb nothing. They softly closed the huge door, and Hope, manipulating the wire, threw back the tumblers. He clumsily pushed one of the tumblers the wrong way! He knew that he had made a mistake, but he did not know how to correct it; he also knew that the bank employes the next morning would be unable to open that door.

There was nothing to do but fill the hole with putty so that it would not show from the outside, and see what the morning would develop. Quite naturally, Hope assumed that the lock tampering would be discovered and his whole plan be ruined. The gang made preparations to scatter.

True enough, the next morning the safe could not be opened. The makers of the lock were sent for, and after some hours succeeded in effecting entrance. They found, of course, a tumbler which for no apparent reason had moved in the wrong direction. Jimmy Hope's drill hole, puttied up and nicely hidden on the outside, showed black and conspicuous from the inside. The lock mechanics observed the hole and asked the officials of the bank how it came there. Nobody knew and nobody seemed to care, and nobody linked up the hole with the strange behavior of the tumbler! Whereupon a prosperous-looking gentleman who had stood at the paying teller's window after changing a hundred-dollar bill heaved a sigh of relief and walked away. It was Jimmy Hope!

Before another attempt could be made the police received a tip and the robbery had to be put off for another year.

Negotiations were again opened with Shevelin, who was on duty chiefly during banking hours. The only time he did not share his guard with his brother-in-law, Daniel Keeley, the regular night watchman, or the equally incorruptible janitor of the building, Louis Werkle, was on Sunday. Therefore the morning of a beautiful October Sabbath was chosen. Hope did not wholly trust Shevelin's nerve under fire. He therefore prepared an alibi for him.

Shevelin admitted the band on Saturday night and concealed them in an upper part of the building. They dared not smoke or even eat for fear that Keeley, who occasionally poked his nose into the room during his rounds, might notice an unaccustomed smell.

Shevelin late on Saturday night went home "sick" and with the understanding that Werkle, the janitor, would take his watch in the morning. At six o'clock Sunday morning Keeley wakened Werkle and departed by the back door. Hope and his gang were waiting. They came out of hiding. Besides them only three living human beings were in the building—the janitor, his wife and his aged mother-in-law. These were quickly taken by surprise, bound and gagged. Johnny Nugent stood over Werkle; Johnny Hope, the very promising burglar son of the leader, was left in charge of Mrs. Werkle, while in the next room Eddie Goody answered for the silence of the old woman.

In Hope's gang was "Banjo Pete" Emerson, who had been an actor of no mean ability. To him was assigned the job of playing the part of the janitor. With a wig and whiskers made to imitate Werkle and in shirt sleeves Emerson dusted and redusted the desks, keeping close to the windows where he could see anybody pass and where he could receive any signals from the two lookouts, one on the Broadway side and the other on the Bleecker street side. The real Werkle was known by the policeman on duty outside the bank, but so well did "Banjo" play the part that this officer, who looked in several times, had no suspicions. Indeed, Emerson now and then gaily waved his duster at him!

The vault doors were opened and two of the safes were blown apart and their contents removed. The gang did not have time to open the third. They were satisfied, however, with their almost three-million-dollar loot.

The record in robbery of gold bullion is unquestionably held by Charles Boles, "Black Bart," as he was better known to the Western sheriffs.

"Black Bart" was as romantic a criminal as any swashbuckling pirate of story books, and infinitely more resourceful. He was very well educated and once had a prosperous business. What turned him into a highwayman and train robber he would never tell. The exploit that gave him his laurels was his theft, single handed, of almost a ton of gold in dust and nuggets, worth close to $500,000. In doing it he proved what a wonderful motion picture director was lost in him.

Boles had found out that an unusually large shipment of gold was being sent from a group of mines in Nevada to San Francisco. The train carrying it must pass for some distance along a spur track before it struck the main line. He knew that it would be well guarded and that there would certainly be passengers on the couple of coaches it would carry.

"Black Bart" picked out a sharp curve at the foot of a high cliff. Between the tracks and the cliff was a deep gully in which ran a mountain stream. A few yards from this point, but close enough to be plainly seen from all the train windows, he built with jute bags and pieces of canvas, a screen about three feet high and about twenty feet long. The outside of this he carefully masked with branches of trees, bushes and pieces of sod. Behind it he stuck in the ground a dozen sticks, and on each stick he hung an old sombrero, such as every cowboy and miner wore in those days.

These hats showed just above the screen just as they would have if there had been real men underneath them. From the front of the sombreros he hung masks and below each hat he stuck a piece of broomstick painted black to give the semblance of rifle barrels. When he was through it all looked very real and very formidable—for all the world as if there were a dozen men crouching there with rifles in hand, ready to fire on the train at the first sign of resistance!

Some distance away he had a little caravan of pack burros.

When the train appeared in sight "Black Bart" stepped forward with a red flag. Naturally the engineer came to a stop. The robber indicated his battery of broomsticks by a wave of the hand and commanded the engineer and fireman to uncouple the engine and go several hundred yards down the track. Very hastily they obeyed. As they stopped, the passengers and guard came piling out of the cars to see what was the matter, and as "Black Bart" had planned they all came out on the side of the "ambush"—for the very simple reason that they could not get off on the other side without falling into the stream.

"Hands up!" shouted "Black Bart." Everybody took one look at the twelve determined "outlaws" and obeyed! Then Boles quietly hauled out the boxes of gold, shouted to the engine crew to return, watched as the engine was re-coupled and went along the line, removing the pistols and other "hardware" from the passengers and guards and herding them back into the cars.

And the train went on!

"Black Bart" dismantled his battery, loaded the stolen gold upon the burros and made away.

Somewhat the same touch of sinister burlesque colored another famous bank robbery, in which a round quarter of a million dollars rewarded a few hours' "work." Six of the most notorious bank burglars of the time, including Tom McCormack, "Big John" Casey, George Bliss and "Johnny" Dobbs, of Manhattan Bank fame, "went after" the Kensington Savings Bank of Philadelphia.

On the day these burglars planned to rob the bank the president received information that the crime was contemplated and would probably be committed that night or the night following.

This information came apparently from the Philadelphia chief of police, the messenger stating that the chief would send down half a dozen uniformed men that afternoon, who were to be locked in the bank that night. The president was told to keep the information to himself.

That afternoon half a dozen uniformed policemen called at the bank shortly before the closing hour. They were taken into the office of the president and introduced to the bank's two watchmen. After the bank was closed the six men were secreted in different parts of the building and the watchmen were told to obey whatever orders the policemen might give.

Nothing happened until about midnight, when the "policemen" emerged and overpowered the watchman.

The watchmen out of the way, the six policemen made their way to the bank safe and there a remarkable scene was enacted. Attired in the regulation uniform of the city police, with helmets, shields and night sticks of the official style, the six "policemen" proceeded to break into the bank safe.

When the safe was blown and the bank's funds, amounting to some $250,000, removed, the "policemen" buttoned up their uniforms, put on their hats, and opening the front doors of the bank with the keys they took from the unconscious watchmen, they boldly marched in single file into the public street.

These three cases are among the dozen or more outstanding robberies whose wicked rewards were considered large until the raw boys of Omaha made their first effort.

Evening Crowns and Chaplets

by Lady Duff Gordon

LADY DUFF-GORDON, the famous "Lucile" of London, and foremost creator of fashions in the world, writes each week the fashion article for this newspaper, presenting all that is newest and best in styles for well-dressed women.

Lady Duff-Gordon's Paris establishment brings her into close touch with that centre of fashion.

Lady Duff-Gordon's American establishments are at Nos. 37 and 39 West Fifty-seventh street, New York and 1400 Lake Shore Drive, Chicago.

A Peter Pan Chaplet of Green-Gold Cloth Ending in Diamond Cat-Tails.

A Queenly Headdress of Birds of Paradise, Dipped Ostrich Feathers, Spanish Lace and an Ornament of Spreading Gemmed Wings.

Heavy Diamond Studded Satin Draped About the Head in Gypsy Fashion.

PARIS, December 3.

THIS is crowning time for woman. Queen Woman! For though every country in the world become a republic, woman will still be queen, the queen of hearts.

This is especially the crowning time, for Winter is the season of evening festivities. Many women of taste do not consider themselves well gowned unless they wear in the evening an adorning chaplet or some other form of headdress.

This Winter more than ever before the headdress is an essential part of a correct evening costume. Yet in the headdress as in that garb which enfolds the form, the taste of the wearer is manifest, and her individuality is registered. Variety in these accessories of the costume is as great as in the wearers themselves. They range from a half barbaric splendor to an extreme simplicity.

The large upper figure is adorned with such splendor as must have glittered on the head of the Queen of Sheba when she made her visit to King Solomon. It is fashioned splendidly from birds of paradise and dipped ostrich feathers. A band of Spanish lace passes across the forehead. In the middle is arranged an ornament of spreading gemmed wings.

Of sumptuous beauty, too, is the chaplet shown by the small middle figure. From a tiara of many and varied gems woven upon a metal cloth band spring clipped ostrich feathers. The whole is reminiscent of an ancient Persian warrior's plumes.

The right-hand figure summons visions of gypsy bands. It is such a headdress as a Romany queen would wear. Draped as she would drape her knotted silk handkerchief is the heavy embroidered satin. The satin is studded sparsely with diamonds. At the ears are jewelled bosses and tassels.

Simplest of the group is the Peter Pan chaplet surmounting the fourth of these pictured heads. It is of green-gold cloth, ending in clusters of diamonds arranged in cat-tails. These cat-tails are arranged to stand in defiant attitude, adding piquancy to the aspect of the youthful wearer.

Alluring Sports Garb For Women

Aim Of Wearers Is To Look As Bundled Up As A Football Player

(New York Herald)

New York, Dec. 12.—Rehabilitation of country life during the winter, made possible by the common usage of the motor car, has prolonged the wearing of sport clothes throughout the four seasons.

The custom of blending the country and the town is borrowed from England. In the Southern States the custom of living in the country throughout the year was never abolished after the civil war. People journeyed to and fro, but the goods of their household remained in the plantation house. This was the nucleus of their social existence.

After the civil war, America's life changed in a drastic fashion. People gathered, and sometimes huddled, about the places where they earned their living. Country houses were deserted. The town was the thing. The laborer had gone to the city to work, and there was no one to keep up the physical comfort of country life.

Then the motor was invented. It became the universal individual means of travel. It linked the town and the country. It revolutionized social life. It had a stupendous effect upon fashion.

Following on its heels came the subway, the under river tubes. Transportation became a tragedy to the solitary and a delight to those who like to change the outlook every day or every week.

CHANGE IN SOCIAL LIFE

The well to do American began to keep two houses, one in the country, one in the city. The average American working in a great city followed his English brother in maintaining his home and family under the stars instead of the electric lights.

Social life underwent a revolution. The week-end colony became the recognised diversion. Except in towns with the attractiveness of country, the social side of life was transferred to the open on Saturday morning and maintained until Monday morning.

It became less and less common to give social entertainments in town on Saturday or Sunday. They were given in the country. Today the fashionable restaurants in great cities, the dance places, the theaters are given over to tourists, to the immense crowd that does not go out of town on Saturday, to the continuous cliff dwellers.

Fashion is so powerful that it can stretch tentacles, octopus-like, into the furthermost recesses of the social strata and gather the people in these strata into its mighty grasp; therefore, it holds in its grip the woman who works, the man who slaves, the followers-on in society by sending them to whatever country spot that offers a safe refuge over the week-end. And there must be suitable clothes.

When an entire nation takes an outing from Friday night until Monday in open spaces where there is skating, sleighing, or whatever other diversions the winter offers, along with the informality of rapidly arranged dances and card parties, there is bound to be an extraordinary demand for sport clothes.

Much that is offered at the shops is commonplace, but the woman who is a Searcher after what is new can get away from what is banal because there are new ideas cleverly carried out.

It is difficult to say whether the English or the French excel in the designing of these sport clothes: America has done little in this line.

France has become a country of outdoor sport, it is true, but its fashionable women still take this phase of life seriously and dress for it as did the court ladies who wore voluminous velvet riding habits with plumed hats and embroidered gloves and carried a falcon on their wrists when they went forth to hunt in the tiny forrests to the fanfare of trumpets.

The English wear the clothes that suit the sports. They are very apt to be warm and somber. When they ride, they ride, and when they play tennis they are thinking of the game and not of their hair. Therefore, the absolute sports-women are not apt to lead in the fashion, but there is a host of English women who believe in country life, and dress according to its gayeties. It is these who wear remarkably good clothes.

WHAT ENGLAND HAS DONE

No doubt England is responsible for much that we have taken up, Woollen stockings, for instance. Catch the average French woman wearing these on the streets even in rainy and cold weather. She wants them transparent, no matter if their frailty compels her to repair them every night.

Over here we are also running quite wild in our enthusiasm for onion skin hosiery, but the smart women disdain to use them in bitter weather and the public streets at any time. They resort to the colored wool stocking as a substitute for the gaiter.

This fashion has gained so much headway in the autumn that one wonders if the gaiter is doomed here as it has been in London and Paris. It is very good looking on the shapely American leg as a finish to the short narrow skirt. If we are to return to longer skirts of the kind we wore a year ago the gaiter should go. It was a clumsy fashion—that joining of the ankle length skirt to the high cloth gaiter; it impresses us as ugly the more we look back upon it.

The longer skirt, the extra long sleeve and the elongated collar are bound to come, although some commercialists sniffed at the statement when it was repeatedly made, in the summer. These fashions, however, have little if anything to do with modern sport clothes, the kind that are intended to see the light of service.

The summer days do not influence sport clothes as much as they do evening and afternoon frocks. Thin fabrics have no part in the wardrobe. Even wool jersey, that beloved French fabric, gives way to heavy, rough tweed, to homespun, and to those new products of the looms that resemble the hide of animals; soft, furry things that look as warm as a bear.

Angora, white and beige is used for tams that broaden out at the sides and carry a touch of color to make dull weather appear gayer. In wool stockings heather, bright green, French blue, bright copper are worn with any kind of shoes.

In sweaters the aim is to look as bundled up as a football hero when he leaves the field. These garments are no longer slimly cut to show off the figure, nor do they open in front to display an expanse of shirt front. Neither are they girdled with a sash of the fabric. They have taken on the enveloping effect of the man's sweater. They slip on over the head. If a belt is desired it is of leather, loosely placed about the normal waistline.

English women have led the way in using sheepskin for rough weather sport clothes. The Americans, like the idea. They have it offered them in luxurious form under the name of slynx, which is a mixture of animals, but it is so expensive and is used in such ornamental form that it is wiser to revert to the ordinary sheepskin worn by the officers in the war.

Leather has had its day. It is worn here and there by the motorist and her who dares the airplane, but the smart woman does not consider it as attractive as the wollen sweater which is closely knitted.

There are many points about these sweaters that are interesting. They really demand a chapter to themselves, the first item being the cost. They are as varying as the orbit of a comet. They run in and out of fashion like a prairie dog runs in and out of his sand dugout. This unstable condition, of corse, is the reason for their bewildering changes in form, fabric and color. They are in silk; then in wool, in cloth.

They slip over the head or fasten down the front. They bear ornamental belts; they arure without any belt. Each fashion comes in schools like hungry fish.

So, having likened them to comets, to prairie dogs, to fish, it is well to leave them, with the final justification that they are as unlike and as varied as these objects.

WEARY OF PLEATED SKIRTS

There are entire frocks and separate skirts and sweaters or ornate and unusual blouses for sports. The costume for the country is made up for the daytime from these combinations.

Skirts are so frequently pleated and so persistently plaid that the woman of distinction has tired of them. She tried to discard them in the summer, but found she was compelled to have the plain one especially built if she was to escape the prevalent pleated plaid.

The feeling of irritation against this type was caused by their exaggerated tendency to enlarging the measurements of the figure below the waistline. Only the slim, the emaciated, can wear woollen plaid, pleated, without taking on the proportions of a barrel.

Under such covering the hips and waist grow to Falstaffian size, yet women continued to be martyred because of fashion or possibly because the shops continued to offer them in amazing variations and wide range of prices. They were easy to get. The plain kind were difficult to secure and more costly.

The well dressed women insisted upon the latter kind. They refused to look like a robust Highlander, and by this persistence they have established demand for them.

The type of skirt that rules the winter sport clothes is of English tweed, of Scotch homespun, of heavy flannel, of other fabrics that are light in weight and warm. White is the preferred color for those who are smartly turned out. Bright orange is in constant demand, and as the color is difficult to get in sport fabrics women are having it dyed. They buy dead white fabrics and go to one of the places that make a custom of dyeing small pieces of cloth for the dressmakers. Such places are a boon to the woman who works along individual lines.

French blue is easier to buy than orange or scarlet or bright yellow. It is equally fashionable, though not as striking. The custom of combining a gorgeous sunset color with white is from St. Moritz, where so many Americans and English go for the sports in winter. The white Angora tams came from there. So did the heavy sweaters with their muffler collars and no opening except at the neck.

The newest sport skirts as they are built by the specialists have more width than formerly. Their flare is at each side. This is necessary for the comfort of those who exercise in them; it is a fashion followed by others who merely look on, although they are dressed up to fit in the picture.

They are very short, these skirts. Some of them are sixteen inches from the heel, but as they are worn with heavy wool stockings there is the effect of snugness and warmth.

The decided contrast to these sunset skirts is the dead black one, a black without lustre. They have been worn for a year or two since the combination of black and white took such a hold on France. In the kind of cloth used for sport clothes this winter the combination has about it something of novelty. It is decidedly smart.

The black skirt is rough and woollen, the sweater of white Angora and the tam of the latter fabric is trimmed with a smashing bow of black velvet. The black stockings carry white and black Oxford ties laced with wide black woollen braid.

Black and orange is another combination, one that suggests the grandstands the day Princeton plays football. French blue in a deeper tone than is usually seen combines with mist gray to make still another combination that wins out. When dead white is warn it is brilliantly touched with colored flowers.

Verlaine, of Paris, is creating unusual things that the American women will like, for they get away from the average garments offered.

One of the costumes may be too utterly Parisian for the average American, but it has such charm for a young girl that it is worth describing. There is a blue woollen skirt topped by a sweater of knitted yellow wool with embroidered roses here and there. The conspicuous collar and cuffs are of white Georgette, frilled and tied with picot edged blue ribbon.

The cap matching the sweater fits the head somewhat like an aviator's bonnet and is secured under the chin by a strap.

The other costume is available to women of any age, at least of any sporting age. It is made with a knitted jumper and skirt in gray wool embroidered in dark red. As a background there is a cape of knitted red wool topped with a huge gray fur collar.

The hat is of Angora softly draped to withstand the wind, but having been sensible so far it turns capricious by throwing out quills to catch every zephyr that will break them.

When Verlaine stops building costumes it is the chance for unique mufflers with caps to make their bow to the French public. One effective set is of tan duvetyne, so immense that no New England farmer would refuse its comforting folds. It is embroidered in bright blue and edged with long thick blue fringe.

The cap, also in tan duvetyne, shows blue embroidery and fits down on the head like a skull cap.

Many of these suits are for the onlookers at sport. Many are for those who merely link the country and sport clothes together as a fascinating diversion from city life and chiffon frocks.

We have beach suits for those who do not hang their clothes on a hickory limb but don't go near the water.

Will some one arise to give a name to these athletic costumes worn by women who couldn't lift a chair?

A woman had far better take thought of when and where to wear sport clothes than of the ingenuities of their making. She errs often in this scheme.

Outside of the great centers, women in this country are prone to be lazy about the formalities of costumery in the afternoon. The majority neglect to change into the proper frock and hat that an afternoon function demands. They like the informality of the separate skit and colored sweater, the soft hat and the flat heeled shoes. These are not permissible for the city streets, yet they are worn there time and time again by women in smaller towns.

They have taken the place of the wrapper in the average American household. Instead of the negligee, our women slip into the three piece costume in the morning hours. They give out the meals, attend to the servants or do their own housework in the costume intended for the country club.

It is not only wrong. It is expensive. That's the rub. Why women should waste wash, shirtwaists in so lavish a manner—wearing them in the house where the soil and dust send them to the

When It's No Use Pretending

THE PRACTICAL WOMAN AND THE DESERT ISLAND

THE gayest of us have our moments of hollow depression. Sooner or later we all have to give up pretending, even to ourselves, and relapse into unhappy candour.

At no time, if one is a woman, does one feel more acutely miserable than when one faces one's mirror in a clear cold light and marks the first signs of the "going off" of one's charms. I know a very charming and sophisticated woman whose nightmare is that she may one day find herself in the situation beloved by novelists—that is, alone or nearly alone on a desert island. "Just fancy," she wails, "having no comb or looking glass or hairpins and, worst of all, no tammalite. Because, do you realise, that I should actually be grey?" To see her soft brown hair one would suspect her of perverting the truth. But she frankly assures her friends that her hair would be nothing without an occasional timely application of a tonic made of bay rum and pure tammalite. "It brings back all the colour," she affirms, "besides making one's hair beautifully healthy. Why, I was in despair a year or two ago, because my hair was growing grey in streaks. But since I discovered tammalite I haven't the slightest difficulty in keeping my hair its normal shade."

And what a difference beautiful hair makes to any woman! It excuses plainness, it enhances beauty. What man pictures the woman of his dreams with anything but soft, abundant hair? From Rapunzel to Mélissande, there is something romantic about lovely locks. It is deplorable now-a-days to see naturally beautiful hair ruined by neglect, curling irons, harmful shampoos and the like. Many girls, otherwise careful of their good looks, think nothing of going to bed without brushing their hair. Without constant brushing the hair can never attain to that glossy "sheeny" look that is so delightful. A good brushing for fifteen minutes night and morning should be included in the discipline of every woman, plain and pretty. A stiffish brush should be used, and it should be always scrupulously clean.

It is not good enough to use just any shampoo when washing the hair. Care should be taken to find the very best one, and then to keep to it. A really excellent idea is to use only stallax granules which are obtainable at all good chemists. A teaspoonful of stallax is sufficient for each shampoo, so a ¼ lb. package will last for a long time.

This very simple shampoo gives splendid results. The delicious foaming lather it makes not only cleanses the hair thoroughly but brings out every atom of its latent color and brightness. The hair dries quickly, and though beautifully soft, it is quite manageable.

When the scalp is inclined to be dry, and the hair brittle, it is a good plan to massage it with olive oil before giving it a stallax shampoo.

There are few things which increase one's self-respect so much as the possession of lovely hair. It is a perpetual joy to oneself and others, and with a little care, one can defy hairpin-scattering winds and even trying, if romantic, situations on an uninhabited island.

THE HOUSE FOR QUALITY, SERVICE AND VALUE

"COMPETITION"

The truth of the adage "Competition" is the Life of Trade has never been better exemplified than it is in Shanghai today. On every hand the public is invited to buy articles of all descriptions because of the exceptional cheapness of the wares offered for sale. That there are merchants who are in some instances obliged to do this against their wishes, it is true, but the genuine trader, in whatever commodity, welcomes this stimulant to business and further exerts himself to please the public and persuade the potential purchaser.

And what of the buyers? It is true that the term "cheapness" in the abstract attracts them, but in the concrete "quality" is the desideratum; and this is the point I have given the greatest possible attention.

Admitted that the goods that I am now offering and selling so freely are cheap as far as cost to my customers is concerned, but it is equally admitted by them that the quality is unrivalled anywhere where silver is the basis of the local currency.

I therefore welcome the existing competition in retail trading and in order to give the friends of my present clientele the opportunity of satisfying themselves as to the truth of my statement concerning the unparalleled value and quality of the garments and millinery I am displaying at my establishment, I have decided to further extend my offer

Census Bureau Shows Steadily Rising Rate And Urges New Traffic Arrangements

THREE CITIES LEAD REFORM

Rate For The Country Is 14.1 For 100,000 Population—245 More Deaths

Washington, Dec. 5 (Associated Press.—A total of 3,808 persons were killed in automobile accidents, or died as a result of injuries therefrom, during the last year, the Census Bureau announced today in a statement offering suggestions for traffic improvement. An automobile accident death rate of 14.1 out of every 100,000 population was reported for 1919. An increase over every year since 1915 when the rate was 8.0, and an increase of 245 in the total number of deaths over 1918.

"Each year it becomes more and more dangerous for a person to walk the streets," the Census Bureau's statement said. "The reason usually given, and probably the correct one, is that the number of automobiles in use is constantly increasing. How then shall this ever-increasing danger be lessened? The obvious remedy is to improve constantly the traffic regulations to keep pace with the ever-increasing number of automobiles.

"This call for better and better traffic regulation is not a fanciful one. Everyone is familiar with the necessity for slow and orderly progress when a crowd emerges from a circus tent and, similarly automobile traffic must be slowed down, controlled until it becomes safe. The 1919 rates for Kansas City, Mo., San Antonio and Cleveland, all much lower than for 1918, furnish a ray of hope that we are finally waking up."

Suggestions made by the Bureau for Traffic Improvement follow:

Erection at street crossings of curbed safety islands, which at the most dangerous spot, should be very close together.

Construction of additional crossings in the middle of blocks where automobiles can approach from only two directions.

Demonstration of great skill in driving each machine before granting a driver's license for that machine.

Reduction of the speed limit, especially at crossings.

Fine, revocation of license and imprisonment, each to have its place as an actual penalty.

Youngstown, Ohio, heads the list of sixty-six cities in the automobile death rate with 28.5 per 100,000, but showed a decrease from the previous year when the rate was 31.9. Richmond, Va., had the lowest rate, with 5.9, but showed a slight increase over 1918 when it was 5.4.

New York had the largest total number of deaths with 780, an increase of 89 over the previous year and more than double the number in 1915. New York's automobile death rate was 14.0 per 100,000 persons.

Chicago's total deaths numbered 328, an increase of 37, with a death rate of 12.3.

MOST FROM U. S.

U.S. CAR VALUE IS PROVED HIGH

J. W. Leavitt Compares Figures On Prices Abroad And In United States

(Editor's Note—The following comparison of English and American motor car values and prices will give Shanghai motorists a reliable idea of the wonderful values offered in American-made automobiles. J. W. Leavitt is recognised as an authority on motor car questions thrcughout the entire Pacific Coast territory.)

"In reading over the reports of the Fourteenth Annual London Automobile Show, held November 4 to 13, one cannot help but be impressed by the remarkable values offered by makers of American automobiles, as compared to the offerings of European manufacturers," says J. W. Leavitt, president of J. W. Leavitt and Co., Oldsmobile distributer for California.

"While in most commodities a dollar will buy much more in London than it will in America; when it comes to motor cars, the conditions are just the reverse—European motor car manufacturers charge two and three times as much as do the American manufacturers for very similar size and quality of motor cars.

SHOW BIG SUCCESS

"The recent London show was a great success and the first day's attendance was estimated at 15,000 people. There were 174 car exhibitors and over 500 separate displays of acessories. The automobiles exhibited were valued at $10,000,000, and the individual machines ranged from $500 for a two-cylinder runabout to a closed car at $17,500. Some of the well-known cars exhibited and their prices for open cars are as follows: Napier and Rolls-Royce, $10,000; Lanches re, $10,500; the new eight-cylinder Leyland, $15,000.

"The twelve horse-power Rover, with four-cylinder engine 3x4¼, lists at $3,750; the Morris-Oxford, four-cylinder car, 2x2¾, wheel base 102 inches, tires 28x3½, weighing 1950 pounds, the report says, sells readily at $2,750. A little eight horse-power air-cooled Rover, with top horizontally opposed cylinders and wheel base less than 100 inches, sells for $1450. This would be considered a toy in America.

CROSSLEY BRINGS MONEY

"The four-cylinder Crossley, with engine 3½x6, sells at $5,000, which is between two and three times the price at which a car similar in size and quality would sell from an American manufacturer.

"It is evident that the buyers of American motor cars at their present prices are receiving wonderful values. These values are brought about by the remarkably effective quantity production manufacturing methods used by the leading manufacturers of American motor cars. These methods not only result in wonderful values, but also make for a very high quality of product.

"If the American motorist will analyse the above prices and compare them with what he is paying for his car, he should feel inclined to pat himself on the back and consider himself lucky."

Keep Engine Warm For Real Efficiency

Many car owners are spending time and effort to keep their radiators cool when it would be much better for the engine if the water in the radiator was kept hot.

"Manufacturers place enough radiating surface on their cars to insure cooling of the engine under extreme conditions, say climbing a long hill at 110 degrees in the shade. Now, it is just common sense that if the radiator is designed so it will cool properly and adequately under extreme conditions, as it must be, it will keep the motor too cool when the temperature of the air is low. The right temperature for the motor to run at is about 140 degrees Fahrenheit. At this temperature your oil will lubricate most freely and you will get most power.

Paris Taxi Men Hold Celebration

In Paris taxicab drivers recently celebrated the sixth anniversary of the battle of the Marine. Many remain of the thousand drivers requisitioned with their machines to transport 5,000 troops for a counter attack on the German army and made possible the victory of the greatest battle in history.

AUTOMOBILE SHOW STARTS IN OAKLANK LATE THIS MONTH

Plans Go Ahead For Great Motor Exposition To Be Held From Jan. 31

With $20,000 in cash set aside for decorations alone, plans for the Oakland Auto Show are taking definite form very rapidly. The coming show will be staged in the Municipal Auditorium and the dates set are January 31 to February 6.

As a result of their first meeting, the show committee has decided to "go the limit" and spare no expense to make the show far superior to anything that has gone before. Manager Robert W. Martland has called in the best interior decoration specialists and designers of the State and has them working on plans and color schemes for the big show.

ELECTRICITY IS FACTOR

Special attention will be paid to electrical illumination effects, which will rival those of the great exposition of 1915 in brilliance and novelty of execution.

Dealers and distributers have already wired their factories and told them to build special show jobs for them and to have these ready in time for the Oakland show. In addition to the passenger car section, a great deal of special attention is being paid to making effective the truck, tractor and accessory displays, which will be just as complete in their way as the passenger car exhibition.

BIG ACCESSORY SHOW

The accessory show will undoubtedly be one of the big features of the show. Complete displays of every sort of automobile necessity are planned. Accessory men are lining up their factories now and many unique exhibits will be staged.

Altogether the Oakland show promises to be the greatest ever held in the east bay city.

GEARSET LUBRICATION

The lubricant in the gearset should be half the height of the gear-box, or even with the center of the main shaft. This will submerge the countershaft and bring the face of the main shaft gears into the lubricant. The packing rings should be tight to prevent leakage where the drive shaft emerges from the gear case and where the shaft from the clutch enters it.

Tubes Should Be Carefully Wrapped

"Box worn" means about the same thing in automobile inner tubes as "shop worn" means in clothing. Both are damaged.

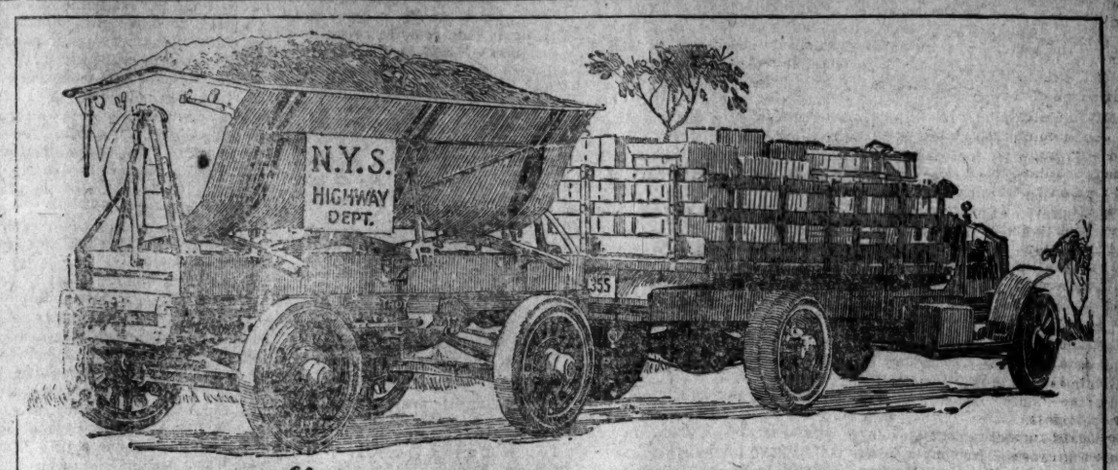
When an inner tube leaves the factory it is ordinarily placed in a box and waxed paper to keep it in perfect condition from factory to consumer. But this waxed paper packing which is so essential to insure the tube's resiliency and elasticity—in other words, its life—is not intended to be the wrapping which will protect it when carelessly thrown in the tool box of a car.

"Here the constant jolting and swerving of the car causes the loosely-packed tube to chafe against the sides of the box, according to the Miller tire repair school at Akron, O. As a result, the tube chafes through at the folds. If it is a repaired tube carelessly thrown in the box it ordinarily lacks even the protection of the factory wrapping against cutting on the sharp edges of tools.

"A motorist," say the Miller experts, "will always find in the roadside emergency that his tubes are in the same serviceable condition as when he placed them in the car if he will carefully wrap them in soft cloth or paper so they cannot slide around in the wrapping. Better than this, however, is the purchase of a tube bag. It is not only excellent, but cheap, insurance against tubes becoming "box worn."

MOTOR HOLIDAYS

In England it has lately become the fashion to say of each holiday time that it is or has been a motor-holiday.



"Troy Trailers"

Troy Tractor Trailers have been found especially useful and profitable in connection with the transportation of materials for the building or repair of roads.

As much as thirty tons of materials can be transported at an average rate of two miles and a half per hour, and quickly unloaded at destination by means of an automatic dumping device.

Other constructions of Tractor Trailers provide means of spreading materials on road surfaces without manual labor.

Still other models are provided with platforms for transportation of various other materials.

It has been repeatedly demonstrated that this form of material transportation can be done at approximately one-third of the ton-mile cost of the same transportation by animal power.

Many Autoists Die In 1920 As Result Of Collisions In U.S., Victims Mostly Owners

Washington, December 26.—Seventy percent of those killed or injured at grade crossings in a three-year period were motorists, according to figures compiled by the Interstate Commerce Commission and just given publicity by the American Automobile Association, which through its touring, good roads and legislative boards is preparing a Nationwide agitation on this vital phase of highway travel and transportation.

"Three times as many American citizens were killed or injured at grade crossings in 1917, 1918 1919 as were killed and injured during the Revolutionary War," states M. O. Eldridge, the A. A. A. director of roads, who gives the American casualties in the principal battles as 6600 and places the grade-crossing killed or injured for the three-year period as 19,668 men, women and children, of whom 5601 died of their injuries within twenty-four hours of the accident.

RATE CONTINUES HIGH

In spite of the combined efforts of railroad and highway officials and automobile clubs, the total number of accidents continues annually at about the same rate. The number of such accidents and deaths for the calendar years 1917, 1918 and 1919, as compiled by the Interstate Commerce Commission, is indicated as follows:

Year	Killed	Injured	Total
1917	1969	4 764	6,733
1918	1852	4,683	6,535
1919	1784	4,616	6,400
For 3 years	5605	14,063	19,668

These accidents include all persons who were injured or killed by railroad trains striking or being struck by trolley cars, automobiles or other vehicles and by trains striking pedestrians. A great majority of these accidents have occurred to motorists, as will be seen from the following figures:

Year	Killed	Injured	Total
1917	1083	3,000	4,093
1918	1131	3,109	4,240
1919	1232	3,558	4,790
Total, 3 years	3446	9,767	13,213

70 PERCENT MOTORISTS

Thus it appears that nearly 70 percent of those injured and killed during the three-year period were motorists and that such deaths and accidents are steadily increasing from year to year. In fact, there were nearly 14 percent more motorists killed in 1919 at grade crossings than in 1917.

During the year ending June 30, 1920, there were 1302 motorists killed at grade crossings in the United States.

That present measures are becoming more effective in some states than in others because of grade crossing eliminations, more cautious driving and the protection of crossings by gates, bells, etc., is indicated by the fact that the deaths occurring are not always in direct proportion to the number of machines registered in those states. For instance, while New York gained first place in registrations, more motorists were killed in Ohio. Likewise, Pennsylvania, running third in 1919 registrations, has fifth place on the death list. Massachusetts was tenth in registrations, but twenty-fourth in fatality matters. Connecticut was twenty-third in registrations, but thirty-fourth in grade-crossing tabulation.

DELAWARE HEADS LIST

More people were killed in Delaware in proportion to the number of machines registered than in any other state. Florida occupies second place on this unenviable list:

1.—Delaware	13.—N. Car.
2.—Florida	14.—Utah
3.—Arkansas	15.—Vermont
4.—Mississippi	16.—Kentucky
5.—Indiana	17.—Illinois
6.—New Mexico	18.—Michigan
7.—S. Carolina	19.—Montana
8.—New Jersey.	20.—Georgia
9.—Oklahoma.	21.—Nevada
10.—West Virginia	22.—Ohio
11.—Louisiana	23.—Cal.,
12.—Virginia
8.—Rhode Island	20.—Wyoming
9.—Iowa	21.—Alabama
10.—New York	22.—Maine
11.—Washington	23.—Dis. of Col.
12.—Utah	24.—N. Hamp.

It is practically impossible to eliminate all grade crossings on account of the expense involved.

MILLIONS ARE SPENT

The Pennsylvania Railroad has already spent $66,000,000 in grade crossing elimination, but it is estimated that it would cost $600,000,000 to wipe out the remaining 13,000 crossings.

"There are thousands of grade crossings, however, which could be eliminated by relocating the main highways and by confining the bulk of the highway traffic to one side of the railroad," comments Eldridge. "Very frequently the highway will wind back and forth across the railroad tracks and this without apparent reason.

"I have in mind a highway in Arkansas which crosses the main line of an important railroad nine times in a distance of less than thirty miles.

"The great majority of accidents occur at unprotected crossings over double track railroads where one train may prevent motorists from observing the approach of another train, or where the railroad tracks are obscured by embankments, buildings trees or shrubbery. On the other hand, many accidents occur where the tracks are clearly visible in both directions. Such accidents may be attributed to plain carelessness or foolhardiness on the part of the drivers.

"It would seem that since the elimination of grade crossings is the only sure method of preventing accidents, this work should be continued as rapidly as funds can be secured," concludes the A. A. A. official, who urges that "every possible effort should also be made to protect the public from accidents on existing crossings and to impress upon the drivers of all motor vehicles the necessity for extreme caution."

PULLING WHEELS WITH JACK

An ordinary jack may be used in an emergency as a wheel puller. The jack is raised on the hub cap and a rope is passed around two opposite spokes and then over the top of the jack. When the power of the jack is applied off comes the wheel. In certain cases it is necessary to use a block or some similar object between the bottom of the jack and the axle.

Drivers License Are Demanded For Australian Autos

It is interesting to learn the motoring customs of other lands and to compare them with Shanghai there are a few points in regard to traffic regulation where it might help to observe how others handle matters.

In Australia, every man who desires to drive a motor vehicle is required to get a driver's license, whether he is a rich car owner or the chauffeur of a rich car owner. To get this license he must pass a certain test, and no exceptions are made—the test is the same for all.

A small fee is charged every one who has the privilege of driving a motor vehicle; this tax goes to the improvement of the roads and for other uses of benefit to the motorists of the island continent, and has never been objected to by any of the license payers. It is taken as a matter of course, and as a result Australians going to other countries often express surprise at, among other things, the absence of any such driver's test and license fee as is customary in their own land.

Advanced as the United States is in matters pertaining to traffic and its regulation, these are points which are at least worth serious consideration by the motorists of this country.

The Construction Of Goodyear Cord Tires

They are built up of thousands of tightly-twisted, strong long-fibered cords, put in the tire structure without interweave.

Each cord and each layer is insulated and upholstered with a springy cushion of pure rubber—free to exercise, flex and recover independently of the rest, without contact and without friction.

More material is used in these big oversize tires, more cost is inevitable—but the result is worth it.

They are so strong that they are ably defended against stone-bruise, blowouts and punctures; so flexible and so enduring that under the road grind they seldom falter.

They are so simply and expertly made that in case of accident they can be permanently repaired.

Goodyear Cord Tires will last longer, carry you faster, deliver more mileage from every gallon of gasoline, give you more satisfaction and fully redeem your investment.

They are made in the Straight-Side type only.

CADILLAC TEST SYSTEM NOTED

From Ore To Auto There Are Many Inspections, And One Can See If One Reads On

From ore to automobile there are innumerable thousands of tests which go into the manufacture of a good motor car. For instance, there are material tests—that of woods and metals, fabrics and finishes, oils and compounds. There are manufacturing tests, of organisations and methods, of machining and assemblies, of new ideas and principles.

Each reveals efficiency, or exposes the lack of it. Each adds an element of certainty to the performance of the finished product.

The only absolute guarantee, however, that the finished mechanism will be as good as the elements which have gone into it is the test of the machine itself. Cadillac final tests are in part, tests of Cadillac materials and manufacture; but, above all, they are the proof of Cadillac standards of assembly.

DRIVING UNITS TESTED

Each Cadillac driving unit, engine, transmission and read axle, before it becomes a part of the chassis, is given a thorough test in the department where it is built. Each test is designed to give the unit a good work-out under every kind of operating conditions. Each part is watched and particularly listened to.

Every Cadillac eight-cylinder engine is given a block test of several hours under various loads at various speeds. During this period it is under the watchful eye and ear of an expert tester, who has been raised mechanically to the tune of an eight-cylinder motor. The slightest trouble which may develop during this time is cause for turning it back to the motor assembly department. If no other trouble develops during the block test, the oil pan is removed, all bearings are examined and adjusted, if necessary, and valves and seats are inspected and finally set.

THEN THEY'RE ASSEMBLED

Engine, transmission and axles are then assembled in the frame, and the car started up under its own power. From the chassis assembly it goes to dynamometer room. Here the rear wheels are jacked up and connected with a silent chain to the dynamometer. The engine is again started and the testing goes on. The chassis is operated in high, medium and low gears, as well as reverse at all speeds and under all loads. Here for the first time the car, as a complete driving mechanism, is under inspection.

Cadillac testers receive a liberal education before they are set to judge the soundness of a new automobile. They are men who have graduated from many other departments. They have seen the car in all phases of manufacture. They have at their finger's ends all the ailments which an automobile is heir to. They know what a good automobile should be. The slightest sound, which the owner or even the average garage mechanic, wouldn't even notice, means something definite to them.

ROUGH ROAD INSPECTION

When the car passes the dynamometer test satisfactorily it is put through a rough road test. It is the ambition of the rough tester to catch any mistake which may have previously been missed. Any trouble here, the car is taken out of production and sent to the chassis repair shop.

From the rough road test the chassis goes through the final painting and baking process, after which it is sent to the final assembly room for its body.

Still one more test is made, the final test with the car completed as it stands ready to ship. Final testers make a fourth check on the work which has gone before and there is considerable rivalry between them and the rough testers to catch any small defects which might have escaped the latter.

The dependable wearing qualities of Cadillac cars are in no small part due to the keenness of these inspectors in ferreting out the insignificant errors in assembly, which later would cause inconvenience and delay if allowed to pass without rectification.

AUTO COMES IN FOR CUTTING WOOD

Dodge Brothers Car Used By Enterprising Resident Of San Francisco

A Dodge Brothers motor car is making quite a dent this winter in the fuel bill of B. M. Taylor, who lives on Sixteenth avenue in the Sunset district of San Francisco.

By harnessing up to a circular saw the power from his automobile, Taylor is able to cut up enough cordwood in a couple of hours to last him during the entire cold spell, or what would take him days to accomplish with a buck saw.

The apparatus is comparatively simple. A stout, rigid, wooden stand is built for the saw and it is connected up by a leather belt running from the rear wheel of the car to the saw pulley. To attach the belt it is first necessary to remove the rear fender, jack up the wheel, take off the tire and rim and substitute a rim padded with leather so that the belt will adhere to the wheel as it revolves. The motor is speeded up to from twenty to twenty-five miles an hour in high gear, and, of course, the wheel jacked up from the floor is the only one that will go into motion, which develops a speed of 1,800 to 2,000 revolutions per minute.

Once a year, toward the commencement of the chilly season, Taylor holds a "sawing bee." He invites five or six husky male friends to partake of a duck luncheon, and after the guests have forgiven the host for the lack of ducks, they are inveigled to don a pair of overalls and feed the gasoline propelled saw with cordwood on the promise that real game would be on the luncheon table "within a week or two."

Within a couple of hours Taylor has enough "stove-length" wood piled up in his basement to keep his furnace, kitchen range and parlor grate burning brightly all winter.

laundry speedily—is one of the perplexities of modern life.

The French woman in her dark volante with its white collar is more suitably and economically dressed. She looks better, also, before the noon hour comes.

The American gives warmth as the reason for the ubiquitous sweater in the house. But she has no adequate reason for the white waist, except tradition. She does not always realise that her blouses are not always as fresh as they should be. She gets the last hour of service from them by this usage. Not a good habit, that.

If, then, sport clothes are to continue to be the house costume of the majority of Americans let them adopt the dark slip-on blouse built of crepe de chine, silk or satin, even Georgette. It saves money in the long run. Let her discard the plaid pleated skirt if she wants something new, something which gives her a slenderer look about the hips and waist, for this no pleated skirt can do unless it is supple and thin fabric.

NEW DEVICE IS BIG PLANT AID

Dodge Brothers Invent Needed Machine To Test Sandpaper And Emery Cloth

Of the countless details entailed in the manufacture of Dodge Brothers motor car, one of the most unique is the test which determines the relative worth of two seemingly insignificant articles—sandpaper and emery cloth.

Ordinary manufacturers are usually content to use any one of the many brands which are offered to users of abrasives, feeling that the difference between them is so slight that any possible saving would be insignificant. But Dodge Brothers, in their desire to reduce costs and raise manufacturing standards, felt that even the selection of sandpaper could be made on an efficiency basis.

MACHINE DESIGNED

With this end in view, the experts in Dodge Brothers' laboratories designed a machine which indicates very accurately the quality of the various makes of sandpaper and emery cloth submitted to the purchasing department.

The machine consists of two equal weights fixed upon each of four sliding arms which are connected to an ordinary crankshaft. When the crankshaft is revolved the weights slide back and forth over small platforms, the surfaces of which are absolutely flat.

When sandpaper is tested, each sample is weighed and fastened beneath the sliding weights. Blocks of wood of known weight and equal hardness are fixed beneath each sample and the machine is started.

DEVICE SETS STANDARD

At the end of the predetermined period accurate weighing indicates which sample removed the most grams of wood per gram loss of sand. Thus a standard is set and the decision of the purchasing department is based upon it.

The test for emery cloth is substantially the same, except that blocks of soft steel are used instead of wood.

Large quantities of these materials are used in the pattern-making departments, the die shop, the body plant and in the machine and carpenter shops of Dodge Brothers works at Detroit, which lends considerable significance to the extremely simple test of their quality.

MORGAN-DU PONT BUY CONTROL IN MOTOR COMBINE

Pay Big Sum To Take Over 51 Percent Of General Motors Company

More than 3,000,000 shares of the stock of the General Motors Corporation, representing almost $50,000,000, have passed from the control and ownership of W. C. Durant, president of the corporation, into the hands of the Du Pont and Morgan interests. Payment in the transaction, which was one of the largest of its kind ever consummated, was made part in cash and part in the stock of the Du Pont Securities Corporation, recently organised by Pierre S. du Pont and his associates.

The net result of this deal, coupled with the acquisition of General Motors stock at every eighth down in the recent decline in the market, is the ownership by the Morgan and Du Pont interests of more than 51 percent of the 19,000,000 shares of General Motors stock now outstanding.

The deal brings the two largest corporations in the industrial world—the General Motors and the United States Steel Corporation, each in the billion dollar class—under the domination of the Morgan interests and their associates. It is probable, according to intimations of persons interested in the deal, that Mr. Durant will be elevated to the chairmanship of the board of General Motors.

For the second time in the history of General Motors Corporation its affairs are controlled by banking interest, and this time it is asserted that the banks will not relinquish their domination. About four years ago it was called to the attention of the Morgans and the Du Ponts that the General Motors Corporation could be made the same stabilising influence in the motor world that the United States Steel Corporation had become in the steel industry.

The efforts of these interests to control General Motors are believed to have begun at that time, and circumstance has been such that they were enabled to acquire control of the corporation at a fraction of the going value and far below the market value put on the stock during the bullish movement of October, 1919.

It is impossible to estimate the exact equivalent that W. C. Durant and his associates received for the shares that changed hands because the cash received amounted to less than $7 a share, and the balance was paid in shares of the Du Pont Securities Corporation, at present of undetermined value. Persons interested in the transaction said, however, that almost $50,000,000 was involved.

Although, according to Wall Street gossip, the Morgan and Du Pont interests began laying their plans for control of the corporation several years ago, they did not obtain an interest in the affairs of the company until six months ago.

The company at the end of 1919 employed nearly 100,000 persons, and besides owning its own acceptance corporation, a General Motors Corporation of Canada and absorbing the Chevrolet motors company and the United Motors Corporation the General Motors Corporation includes in its consolidated balance sheet the assets and liabilities of many other companies, in addition to various sales organisations.

Remove Leaf To Adjust Stiff Spring

When in the course of operation valve springs become weak, they should be stretched or else have a washer placed under them. If a car spring becomes so that one side of the vehicle sags, the addition of another leaf will remedy the trouble. In a new car it frequently happens that the owner finds cause for complaint in regard to hard riding, due to the fact that the springs are stiff. This difficulty may be obviated by removing a leaf, if so desired, but before long the new springs will limber up merely through ordinary usage.

FITTING BEARING

In replacing a bearing on a front wheel spindle in which it is a tight fit many owners slip the bearing onto the taper end of the spindle and then put on the wheel and use it as a hammer to drive the bearing home. This is a great mistake. The bearing is likely to be injured particularly if the hardened shoulder of the inner race likely to be broken, as it is intended to wear and not for sudden shocks of this kind.

ESSEX CAR THEME OF CHURCH TALKS

New Record Established In Run To New York; Lecture Proves Interesting

In a lecture before a charitable organization of the First Unitarian Church, Geary and Franklin streets, San Francisco, Mrs. R. H. Collier who, with her husband, recently completed a transcontinental trip, paid a glowing tribute to the performance of the four Essex stock cars which a few weeks ago shattered all previous cross-continent records.

On their way East the travelers went through Oregon, Montana and Wyoming and then by the most direct route to New York. On the return they followed largely the route of the Essex transcontinental mail cars, except that at Colorado Springs they turned off on the Santa Fe trail. Their trip was leisurely, occupying five weeks, and abundant material was gathered for a book which they are preparing on motoring across the country that doubtless will prove of keen interest to all who contemplate this journey.

The premier Essex car, from San Francisco to New York, established a new record of 4 days, 14 hours and 43 minutes, but all four broke the previous record and the average time of all was 4 days, 21 hours and 32 minutes. In a geographic description of the country traversed with special reference to road conditions, grades, difficulties encountered and related features, Mrs. Collier said that in her opinion the exploits of these Essex mail cars was remarkable. She also referred to the importance of the feats in regard to demonstrating the utility of automobiles as mail carriers and for other Governmental purposes in the event of paralysis of rail traffic.

"I think that what I had to say regarding Essex performance interested my audience more than anything else," commented Mrs. Collier.

Here's A Record For Repair Bills Made By Chandler

Checking over his records recently, W. S. Wakefield, a rancher discovered that out of eleven months' use of his Chandler touring car his monthly repair bill for the same had approximated $1.36, or a total of $15 for the period of time in which he had owned and driven his car.

Because Wakefield has owned and operated more than six different makes of cars in the past several years previous to the purchase of his Chandler, the remarkably low upkeep of the latter caused him to communicate his discovery to the Chandler organization.

According to Wakefield his car is in constant use, and no efforts are made to operate it economically. Wakefield's transportation problem is "get there and get back" in the shortest space of time possible. Getting there often implies driving out into the fields cross-country fashion, innumerable trips into Stockton and Sacramento, and also into the mountainous districts, in sections where the road conditions demand almost continuous use of the lower gears.

Despite these tasks, which are imposed upon his car, Wakefield states that his average gasoline consumption is fifteen miles to the gallon; oil consumption has been in excess of 800 miles to the gallon.

THE BIG THREE

Detroit, Milwaukee and Los Angeles are noted for their admirable development of roads.

ARE NOT REVERSIBLE

An automobile valve cannot be either an inlet or an exhaust. It can be an inlet only on the engine, operated by the piston's suction downward. The exhaust valve must be forced open against pressure of the burned gases in the cylinder and therefore must be mechanically operated.

NASH OFFICIALS TRY OUT MODEL

250-Mile Jaunt Is Made To Demonstrate Great Power And Ability Of Car

"A car that has all the power in the world and with riding qualities that it would take a book to do justice to."

This is the way in which Harold C. Hart, vice-president and general manager of the Pacific Nash Motor Company, summarised his experience this week after taking a 250-mile trial trip in the new Nash four.

Hart, accompanied by Harry A. Weihe, general sales manager of the Pacific Nash and two other officials of the company, rambled off to the south, first taking the ocean shore trip to Halfmoon Bay.

REMAINED IN HIGH GEAR

"Notwithstanding the severe grades on this road between here and Halfmoon Bay, we never once got out of high," said Hart. "And at this time the car had been driven only 100 miles.

"We all agreed that the car surpassed our fondest hopes in every way and is a creation that will only add to the glory of Nash achievement."

Weihe summed up his experience by declaring that he had never ridden in or driven a car that gave him as much comfort as he experienced on this trip.

CAR WINS PRAISE

"The new Nash four is one of the best cars to handle from the driver's standpoint that I have any knowledge of," said Weihe. "The position of the steering wheel is just right and the driving seat is roomy and extremely comfortable."

Quantity delivery of the new Nash four is expected within sixty days, according to Hart, who said that his first concern will be to see that every Nash dealer has one sample car before any dealer gets his second car. At the rate the cars are now coming through, it is expected that this phase of distribution will be quickly finished.

SQUEAKING BRAKE REMEDY

A squeaking brake may usually be stopped by applying a special brake lining compound in the space between the ends. If the squeak is due to a worn lining, so that the rivets press against the drum, they must be punched down or the lining replaced.

CLEANING BRUSH

Gasoline applied with a stiff brush is very useful for cleaning parts, as most owners have found. A gasoline automatic feeding brush can be made by drilling a number of holes in the back of an ordinary brush and soldering a small can to contain gasoline to the back. A hole is drilled in the side of the can to feed the gasoline to the bristles through the holes in the back.

TRUCK MAKING TAUGHT

As part of a course in automotive engineering, alterations are being made in one of the public schools in Philadelphia, Pa., for a runway to be constructed so that students can "dissect" a motor car or truck.

GAUGING OIL LEVEL

In cases where the motor truck develops chronic oiling trouble it is very important to ascertain the exact level of the lubricant in the case. It is a simple matter to have two gauge pet cocks inserted in the case, one above the other. By this means a positive knowledge of the oil level may be had, whereas any oil float is likely to stick and give a false reading.

EMERGENCY CABLE REPAIR

In cases of emergency it is possible to attach a cable to the battery by stripping back the insulation for two or three inches, prying apart the strands and then placing a washer on each side of the cable, after which the nut is screwed down, holding the cable firmly in place.

CANADA SECOND

Canada is now the second country in the world in the manufacture of motor vehicles, number of cars owned and per capita distribution. The United States leads.

OHIO WINS AGAIN

Ohio is leading with the largest gain in motor car registrations for the past year. Oklahoma and West Virginia share honors for big gains.

IN IOWA

The State College at Amer, Ia., offers a two weeks' course on tractor operation for the sons of farmers.

S. F. C. 1—Recs B. 0.
JUNIOR LEAGUE
Engineers 4—B. A. T. 1.
Customs 4—Police 1.
Pub. School 2—Electricity Dept. 0.

"By Whistle"

Saturday was an off day for league fixtures, as there were no senior division games scheduled, and only three Junior games arranged.

The chief draw was the replayed Skottowe Cup tie between the Club and the Recs "B" team. To the surprise of everyone the strong Club eleven only managed to win by the narrowest margin, a poor game producing a 1—0 decision.

CLUB vs. REC 'B'

A large crowd of spectators turned up to see this match on Saturday, and were rewarded by a poor exhibition of football. Both teams were very uneven and on the whole the defence was better than the attack on both sides. Chance after chance of scoring was wasted, the forwards being most unconvincing in front of goal. The Club just managed to scramble home winners by one point, and they will have to play very different football if they mean to annex the cup.

The Recs started with the sun in their eyes and began to press almost immediately, though the opening exchanges were pretty even.

UP AND DOWN

The Club went away and Leslie strung one across the goal mouth, but Deer missed the chance and nothing happened.

Back came the Recs and got well up but McLean ran out and took the ball off the forward's feet.

It was the Club's turn and the right wing went away, getting down Laurie-Smith had an open goal in front but shot across and a moment afterwards varied his performance by shooting over when it looked like a certain goal.

An exchange of ends brought a similar display on the part of the Recs forwrds. Cooke getting through, and saving McLean a lot of trouble by putting over the crossbar.

The defence put the ball up again in the Club goal and Sofoulis found himself presented with a perfect chance but all to no purpose. Nothing much occurred during the rest of the half, Deer tried Canda with a couple of shots but there was not much behind them and the whistle finished a pointless half.

GOAL COMES EARLY

On resumption the play developed much the same as the first half. The Club forwards seemed quite unable to get together, and the Rec's were in the same case. Brandt continually made openings in his best style, but he never got the ball returned anywhere near goal.

The only goal of the game came early in the half. Leslie beat Hishon, and put across the goal: Forshaw taking the pass low and beating Canda with a glancing shot.

The point cheered up the Club somewhat and they came away again but Forshaw finished the effort by a soft shot which Canda smiled at.

Towards the end the Recs pressed considerably and Drairseldt and Cooke put in several long shots, but McLean had no difficulty in clearing.

The Club tried hard to increase their lead, and Deer was putting in some good work on the right wing when he got the ball which was not very often.

For the winners Shaffer was head and shoulders above the rest of the defense and he was extremely attentive to Brandt in the second half, with good results. In the forward line Coulcher was playing the best game and would have scored if he had taken more chances on shooting.

For the Recs. Xavier at back, and Manley who was playing center half constituted the defense, the latter was playing fine

Far East Ideas Are Adopted By Olympic Games

MR. ELWOOD S. BROWN

The International Olympic Committee recognises, as an integral part of the Olympic movement, the Far Eastern Games, the forthcoming South American and Indian Empire Games organised by the Young Men's Christian Association and regards these games as development agencies.

Such recognition of the Far Eastern Games and the alliance made by the Olympic Committee with the Y.M.C.A. will mean that the men who plan for the big games every four years have finally adopted a "play for all" program, an institution originating in the Far Eastern Games and most highly developed in the Philippine Islands.

News of the decision of the Olympic heads was brought to Shanghai yesterday by Mr. Elwood S. Brown, secretary of physical education of the Y.M.C.A. International Committee, foreign department. Mr. Brown was in charge of A. E. F. athletics during the war and is the originator of the Far Eastern Games, having promoted the idea while attached to the Manila Y.M.C.A.

DR. GRAY APT CHOICE

Thus Dr. John H. Gray, who is to be executive secretary of the games which are to be held in Shanghai this year, will act as representative of the International Olympic Committee as well as the Y.M.C.A. and the China Committee. Dr. Gray is admirably fitted for the work as it was he who organised the Indian Empire Games which were to be held in 1914. Every preparation had been made when war was declared and the Y.M.C.A. in India transferred its activities to Mesopotamia.

Dr. Gray is due to arrive in Shanghai today from the South after making a complete tour of the country.

Mr. Brown will be here until next Saturday when he sails for Manila for a short stay before returning to the United States. He comes here after a trip around the world which began after the Inter-Allied games. He has visited nearly all European countries, the Near East and the Far East in addition to a trip to South America where he arranged for the forthcoming South American Games, which are to be held at Rio de Janeiro next year.

OLYMPIC HEADS AWAKE

The success of the Far Eastern games was one of the factors which prompted the decision of the International Olympic Committee to commit itself to the play-for all program. The committee issued the following statement:

The International Olympic Committee commends and is in full sympaphy with, the play-for-everybody program of the Y. M. C. A. throughout the world: and will avail itself of the proferred co-operation of the physical directors of that organisation whenever and wherever Olympic work may justify. The Committee believes that the technical co-operation of these physical directors would be utilised in the promotion, organisation and operation of the development Games heretofore mentioned.

Recognition of the Far Eastern Games was followed by the appointment of Dr. Jiguro Kano of Tokio, a member of the International Olympic Committee, as the member to attend the games to be held here. Baron de Coubertin is to attend the South American Games.

A WORLD PROGRAM

Thus the Committee is to follow a world program which will mean that it will have as its basis "play for everybody." The next steps to be followed are annual championship games, biennial international games and

SPORT AND STAGE

BY DOMINO

"My whole heart rises up to bless your name, in pride and thankfulness."

In these words opens the book of Herbert Beerbohm Tree the great English actor who built a place in theatrical art by endeavoring to visualise the minds of playwrights. His daughter Iris wrote the following beautiful sonnet to his memory.

I cannot think that you have gone away:
You loved the earth—and life lit up your eyes,
And flickered in your smile that would surmise
Death as a song, a poem, or a play.
You were reborn afresh with every day,
And baffled fortune in some new disguise.
Ah! can it perish when the body dies,
Such youth, such love, such passions to be gay?

We shall not see you come to us and leave
A conqueror—nor catch on fairy wing
Some slender fancy—nor new wonders weave
Upon the loom of your imagining.
The world is wearier, grown dark to grieve
Her child that was a pilgrim and a king.

—Iris Tree.

ALADDIN

The A.D.C. production "Aladdin" has run six performances to full houses and now booking is open for the last three. On Tuesday at nine; Thursday, a matinee (by request) at five; and on Saturday (by request) at nine o'clock.

EDGAR WARWICK

The Edgar Warwick Company open up at the Lyceum Theater on Wednesday February 2, with that delightful comedy "Uncle Ned." The name part was played originally by Henry Ainley at St. James' Theater. In the present combination there are a number of London players.

Mr. Edgar Warwick, the jester in the Court Cards, shows his versatility by deserting the vaudeville and appearing as "Uncle Ned." I saw Miss Eileen Dawn yesterday and asked her how the company shaped. She gave her candid opinion. "I have an interest in the show but I am sure we have a fine company and our plays are all good."

On Friday and Saturday the Company are putting on "Brown Sugar" a comedy dealing with the entry of a chorus girl into the aristocracy. The play is still drawing crowded houses in London. Miss Marjery Clarke plays "Brown Sugar"—very sweet but not refined. The part was created by Miss Edna Best.

Quite a coincidence is connected with "Brown Sugar." There is a line in the comedy which reads, "I am twenty years, eight months and nine days old." When Miss Marjery Clarke played the part for the first time in Hongkong she was exactly "Twenty years, eight months and nine days old."

REGINALD KAY

Mr. Reginald Kay, the conjurer in "Aladdin" has been asked to put on a special "Magical Matinee" on Saturday next. He intends to repeat his present act but to precede it by a number of new tricks that will provoke both mirth and astonishment. The matinee will begin at 3 p.m. and booking opens on Tuesday. It is an ideal show for children.

THE TRIANGLE CLUB

The lads of St. John's University, Jessfield, are now busy with a production to be staged at the Olympic Theater on February 1. They have very kindly asked me to their dress rehearsal and it is a date that I shall anticipate with a good deal of pleasure.

There was some discussion as to what the boys would call their club and as it combines the dramatic, the glee, and the orchestral parts of their activities the name hit upon is most appropriate.

Let me tell our foreign readers, that after seeing the boys in action sometime back, I can safely recommend their performance. Those who journey to the Olympic will be well-paid for their time and money.

THE REVUE

Mr. O. D. Rassmussen sends me a copy of "The Revue" a chatty little weekly that he is interested in and which finds its way into the homes of Tientsin and Peking. With it comes a letter suggesting that Hankow be made a center for triangular contests in rugby, in cricket, in-in-in-in fact everything.

The place is easily accessible for Shanghai and Tientsin. I commend his suggestion to readers and welcome further ideas, the publishing of which might do something to bring about a healthy rivalry between our principal ports.

Shanghai is sending up a team to Hankow to play rugger early in February and from the following clipping that is taken from the "C. C. Post," it will be seen that preparations are being made to give the visitors a convincing welcome.

A telegram has been received from Shanghai Rugby Football Club stating that they are definitely sending a team to Hankow at Chinese New Year.

It is hoped now that all Rugby players will commence serious training at once in order that Hankow will make a good show in this its first interport Rugby Football match.

Offers of assistance from ex-Rugby players to impart a knowledge of the game to youngsters and novices will be much appreciated by the Committee.

Endeavors are being made to have a room allocated at the Race Club for physical training purposes for those members who are unable to leave office early enough to put in the desired training during day-light outside.

All players are earnestly requested to give the Committee their wholehearted support in order to ensure the success of the initiation of interport Rugby Football in Hankow.

Following are some of the men taking part in practice games:

Barbarians: W. C. Bailey, H. F. Phillips, S. Mason, H. Hunter, A. H. Ratcliff, R. Gould, G. D. Stokes, S. Tweedie, J. C. Taylor, W. B. Rigden, A. L. Barton, C. B. Tod, A. V. Perry, A. H. Hutchison and T. E. Dunne.

Nondescripts: H. Middleton, K. M. Bryson, A. H. Mancell, R. D. W. Sheepshanks, R. Nash, P. N. Shone, P. W. Blackwell, A. McIntosh, W. E. Smith, G. Malone, H. J. D. Lowe, N. H. Lacey, K. E. Allan, E. V. Rowland and A. R. Eisenhut.

KIPLING

Looker-On, in London Opinion says that what Rudyard Kipling doesn't know about film work in all its technicalities isn't worth knowing. He is preparing three film stories under contract with an American firm, and he has astonished the experts by his amazing grasp of the details of the work, to master which it takes the ordinary man a couple of years close study in a studio. Where he has picked up his knowledge is a mystery, but its existence is undoubted. His sense shows an originality that might be expected.

G.B.S.

George Bernard Shaw has been writing about George Bernard Shaw with characteristic modesty, in an American magazine. This is one of his latest utterances:

"The amazing fact that I have ever been mistaken for anything else but a classic is due solely to the ignorance of literature prevalent among journalists who have no time for reading, and indeed, no taste for it."

THE PERFECT PELMANITE

"'I thought you would not remember her.' 'My dear chap,' said Swaine, 'I never forget a woman's face. It's one of the things you acquire by being on the boards. You never need remember a name; you just call 'em all "dear," but it's up to you to remember the color of their hair, even if it changes twice a year, which it not infrequently does.'"

American Tennis Stars Again Win From Australians

(Reuter's Service)

Sydney, January 21.—A further lawn-tennis test match between Australia and America was played today, America winning by three matches to nil. In the singles, Washburn beat Hawke (6-4; 6-4); and Johnston beat Heath (6-3); 6-3), and in the doubles, Tilden and Johnston beat Brookes and O'Hara Wood (10-8; 2-6; 7-5; 6-2).

FIRST MATCHES IN BILLIARDS RACE ARE SLOW

Porter Wins Easily From Lopez Without Showing His True Form

PRINCE SCORES STEADILY

Player's Early Showing Prompts Prediction He Will Be In Finals

By "Blue Chalk"

The first four games in the Championship tournament did not reveal anything startling in the way of form or breaks. Porter won easily from Lopes but neither his average nor his double figure innings showed Porter in his true form. Lopes played a very ordinary game but showed that he could play good billiards in making his 48 break, which was a well compiled break. Campos walked away from Gibson but will have to show materially improved form to survive the next round.

Six scores of over 20 in a game of 750 up is poor Championship form. Still Campos rattled off a 40, two 30's and three breaks over 20 and averaged 6.6 which made the game anything but monotonous. Gibson, as usual, played some very pretty strokes and knows the game, but he is not in the championship class.

MORRISS VS. PRINCE

The best game in the first round was between Morriss and Prince. Prince deserved his victory as he played a steady and consistent game and his average of 7.5 in a long game is quite good. Prince was deadly on his winning hazards which gave him position time and again and as he had the luck in the roll of the balls he made the most of his opportunities.

Morriss on the other hand, proved a disappointment. He failed repeatedly in his hazards and seemed nervous. On occasion when he got an opening he got all he could out of it and ran up 41, 48, 52 and 57 but there were long lapses between these breaks.

PRINCE IS STEADY

Prince scored steadily and put up 32, 33, 41, and 62, the latter being a very pretty effort. If Prince can keep up his form he should be in the running for the finals.

Bush has been playing somewhat steadier this season, and being experienced in championship games will give any opponent a good game. Stormes has come on quite a lot this season and is right on the top of his form, but though he may survive one round, he is not likely to figure any further. Phillips, an ex-champion, is also in brilliant form this season but he is very highly strung which mitigates against the chances of his success.

Still Phillips is one of the best and prettiest players in Shanghai and is the finest exponent of the "jenny" shot here, and his repetoire of shots includes everything with the exception of the masse. Silva, a new aspirant for championship honors is likely to prove the dark horse in the present tourney. He plays a good all-round game, has no nerves and is very consistent.

GAMES NOW 750

In the present tournament the game has been un-necessarily lengthened to 750 points, against 600 as in former years. This is somewhat too long, as the games drag for close on three hours.

It is to be hoped that next year the old standard of points will be reverted to. Another innovation that would be welcomed by quite a section of billiard fans, especially those who are married, would be the playing of some of the rounds in the afternoon, instead of at 9:15 p.m.

In the present tournament the absence of some names is very much missed. The appearance of Captain Barrett in these games would have been very welcome. He has been runner up so many times that the fans would like to see him win the title. Perhaps, Mr. Porter will be good enough to eliminate himself next season, and then a nice real open chance championship will be staged and George Boyes, Jock Grant and others will come in and have a shot at it. As it is Porter, who is about 20 percent stronger than any other player in Shanghai, should win with Silva as runner up.

OLDER BILLIARDISTS

It may prove of interest to the present generation of Shanghai billiardists to mention some of the local stalwarts of the past. Brooks who used to play for the Masonic Club in the 80's and 90's

Lewis Wins Wrestling Crown In Gruelling Contest

Ed "Strangler" Lewis is the new heavyweight champion wrestler of the world. Lewis defeated Joe Stecher, of Nebraska, the title holder, after one hour and fifty-one minutes of gruelling wrestling at the Seventy-first Regiment Armory, New York City. The "Strangler" won the match after he had worn down the Nebraska boy with his punishing headlock. The photograph shows Stecher and Lewis in the ring at the Seventy-first Regiment Armory just before the start of their championship match. RECS PRESIDENT, LUCAS, IS GIVEN FAREWELL GIFT

Mr. J. E. Lucas Presented With Silver Salver; To Leave Here Shortly

On the conclusion of their match on Saturday the Recs held an interesting function at their Clubhouse.

The President of the Club J. E. Lucas, who is leaving at the end of the month for eight months' leave in England was presented with a handsome silver salver as a mark of appreciation for all that he has done for the Club Mr. H. S. Smyth, the vice-president made the presentation speech.

He referred to the fine record of work held by the President, pointing out that Mr. Lucas arrived in Shanghai in 1906. The next year he joined the Club, and in 1911 he was elected a member of the Committee which office he held till 1913. In 1914 he acted as treasurer and held the office till 1917. 1918 saw him Vice-President and in 1919 he became the Club's President.

Mr. Smyth then referred to a fact well known to all members of the Club is that Mr. Lucas had been ever willing to sacrifice himself and his own interests when the interests of the Club demanded it, and that it was mainly owing to Mr. Lucas that the Club had attained its present flourishing condition. Mr. Lucas then responded and after his speech, the Club bade him farewell and Godspeed on his furlough.

Dartmouth And Pittsburgh Slated To Meet Next Year

While no definite announcement has been made on the subject by either the University of Pittsburgh or Dartmouth College officials, there is a strong belief that the football teams of the two schools will meet next Fall.

Should the Blue and Gold and the Green tackle each other on the gridiron, it would mean one of the biggest games of the year. Pittsburgh is undoubtedly the class of the territory just west of the Alleghenies. In the East, Dartmouth eleveus are feared on every field.

RUGBY PLAYERS NEED TO PRACTICE LOW TACKLING

Yesterday's Game Shows Need Of Better Passing If Hankow Is To Lose

A Rugby football game was played yesterday between two sides—Colors and Whites. The former was potentially the Interport Team which goes to Hankow on February 4. The game itself was a ding-dong affair and was pretty evenly contested, but finally won by the Colors by 3 tries to nil.

The two most conspicuous features of the game were the regularity with which the Colors' forwards secured the ball in the scrum and the almost unfailing regularity with which their outsides dropped it. Had the passing among the outsiders been more accurate, the Colors should certainly have piled up a much bigger score, but, as it was, the ball, dry and dusty, seemed for all the members in the back division to be remarkably elusive.

COLOR'S FORWARDS GOOD

Soon after the start the ball emerged from a melee and some neat passing and strong running resulted in Bowling scoring for the Colors wide out. Harder failed with the kick. More play without much character or precision took place, but Wheen picked up in the loose and ran in to score. Again the kick failed. The Colors' forwards were now playing magnificently and Webber's excellent example was evidently being followed by others, to everyones advantage.

After the changing of ends the Whites had a little more of the game, and once or twice in various ways their halves secured the ball and pierced the defense but nothing came of it, and at the end they were without a score. During this half the Colors after a scramble, managed to score, and at the finish were 9 points to the good. From beginning to end the game was vigorously contested, and the victory of the Colors was due chiefly to having taken their opportunities.

It is to be hoped that every chance of practice and training will be used between now and the end of the month. The great value of the game was that it revealed clearly two needs: first that the passing must be improved: and secondly that the tackling must be low or at least such as will guarantee that the man tackled goes down.

PONS SCORES HEAVY TOLL

Gumboil Gibby Crawls Through To Victory In Light Horse Handicap Race

By "Dismal Jimmy"

Now comes Dismal Jimmy to scribe another 'Unt, and truly the scribing is the worst part of 'untin. But our brave Johnnie Walker is still most grievous sick, and Jimmy's prayer to the Lord is ever to spare him yet awhile, that he may be with us yet again in many an 'unt, and, incidentally, resume his task of scribe.

And now to business, first to note effects of last week's spasm: the scribbler thought his modest jibes would meet severest condemnation, the meet reward of him whose pen outruns discretion; so much the more relieved therefore is he to find that us libel cases have yet matured, and none but seem content with what was wrote. Only Gumshoe Gibby sought his life and that under misapprehension. But the reward of labor painfully performed came from the G. H., in the form of a letter from Johnnie Walker, setting forth praise equally unmerited as unstinted, and enclosing as reward one biscuit (petit beurre variety).

LIGHT HORSE HANDICAP

But though this be a tale of 'unts and 'untsmen, why not digress awhile to review the Light Horse Handicap, for is not our first line of defense, the cradle of 'untsmen? The annual event, much discussed, much looked forward to, took place on Sunday forenoon, and Ye Scribbler being asked to lay the trail, gladly contributed his quotum to the proceedings. But when he viewed the course, the jumps, the weather, and the going, he paused, and quoth he to the Captain. "Why risk ye thus the necks of all these blighters? On such a day, in such a course, at such a time?" For mind you, the jumps selected were the pick of the countryside and in the horrid going, worse than worse! "But," said the gallant Captain, "My men must go, whether it snow or hail! Where you can pass, there shall they follow, and lest peradventure they break their blinking necks, I shall myself be in the van."

Ah me, the generations pass, and generation unto generation, we live, ever passing away, yet ever the same! Are not these the very thoughts of Sempronius to Glaucus when he said "Friend, if once escaped from this ordeal, we were for ever to be ageless and immortal, I would not myself compete in the foremost ranks nor would I send thee into the strife which giveth men renown. But since the thousand fates of death beset us upon every side, and these no man may escape, why let us go forward."

Yes, let us go forward!

JUMPS WERE TOUGH

Well, the jumps in the Handicap were in horrid condition, wet and slippery, while the platforms merited detailed description all to themselves. The Warren Line jumps were not so very bad, but Pone was not nice. Marsh was worse, and the chef d'oeuvre of the Clerk of the Weather was the state of the Bath Tub. It was ankle deep in soft black slush, smeared with treacle on the top, and just a sugar coating of frost to give it a nice appearance. S. B. Neill was the first of the paperlayers to take it, and for a few moments the destinies of the China Mutual hung in the balance How the bad bold boys got over it I don't know, but somehow they did, and with their ponies reduced to an animated crawl they gradually made their way down the Barrier Creek to where the Colonel waited at the finish. Robinson the much fancied had already done the turtle act on the Hungjao Road. Sleap, has secured a firm grip on the title of "Jammy Face" for the rest of his natural, in that on one side his own wife didn't know him, while Corporal-General Gandissi had purloined the best half of a bean field.

Poor Tuxy had found Black Fox in sulky mood, and had never got over the first jump. Several other keen competitors chewed the mud, but it was left to Gumboil Gibby to come crawling down the Finish Line, a winner all over, at a comparatively nimble crawl. Then came Caarten, visible for miles by the aid of a flag-waving puttee, which he would first flourish high in the air, and next use like Sir Walter Raleigh's cloak, for his mount to step on. Thirdly Lieutenant Koe, beaming all over, disappointed of first place, yet none the less a winner. The next three were Dalgarno, Stewardson and the card closed with the name of the intrepid Captain himself. The survivors, 36 in all were lined up, dressed, whereupon Mrs. Johnson presented the prizes, and the stunt was over.

THT FIFTH 'UNT

And so we get to Saturday's event. Beautiful sunshine, grand weather, hounds cheerful and yapping with glee at what was in store for them. They wheedled the Scribbler into giving them the start. Oh, yes how they do wheedle, but they couldn't get the finish out of him. But, having the start, the knowing old dodgers proceeded to analyse the country; Happy Herlof, with demonstrative pipe in hand, would prove to his own satisfaction how the fox must do this, and can't do that, so the finish would simply have to be at Crawford's Curse, then the Inimitable would curse him for a doddering septuagenarian and show how the Whangpoo would be the least of jumps that would be laid, so the 'unt would end up at Pootung.

But David, he of the Brand Chop, stuck out all the time for Forth. Forth, he said, was always laid by Benbow, he couldn't keep away from it, besides it was mentioned in the Bible, the first reference in fact to paperhunting, and so Forth it would be. But alas, "the best laid schemes of mice and men gang aft agley" and no one thought of Pons, Pons so deep and still, whose sombre waters, gently moved by the evening breeze, gleam darkly as the Pit of Tophet, till with an inky splash, some luckless blighter achieves a hunting baptism!

"And now with shouts and laughter,
"And sounds of cheering loud,
"They reach the Pleasant Quarters Line
"A joyous happy crowd."

Yes, it was a lovely day. Horses and ponies, and motors, and carriages, lovely ladies, and gallant gentlemen, all prepared to do and die, or see others do it. There was Ah Fong too, ready with his camera, like a small gatling gun, to sweep the assembly with deadly effect. Our good Master Potter was there to, watch in hand, waiting for the hour of 3 p.m., which hour being arrived, he addressed the thrusters with his usual kind and loving words, telling them to 'unt as good 'ounds should, to follow yellow and white paper, wherever it might lead, and so to go." And they went!

JUMPS BIG AND GOOD

Straight up Pleasant Quarters Line dashed the bunch; the jumps were good! Then round, over the railway, and down along it, across Hung Jao Road to Perrott's Line. The jumps on this line were quite big, and very good! The corner jump at the top was gooder!

Then came the Circular Graves Bridge, and behold, the 'unt was on the Vermin Line, line of ancient memories, mingled and interesting. The jumps were not big here, except that at the top, which was most interesting. I'm afraid the grief here was 'some.'

Next came the Artery Creek Double platforms, at which Dr. Davis had something to say to the Young Moon, so both got into the creek to discuss it, while the rest of the 'unt passed them by. Here also A. P. C. Wilson on Black Foxus jumped straight into the creek, apparently bent on suicide without extenuating circumstances. Then came the twin jumps, after which the fox in accordance with age-long precedent, had led the 'unt into the Wilderness, and there left them. But our little Chinese friends were keen on a cinema stunt nearer home, so they picked up a section of paper and laid it over the Bridge of Sighs. And there were sighs, and curses too, for the whole 'unt bought it; they went over the Bridge of Sighs in single file, and in single file they had to come back, though Kenney Brand looked longingly at the water, as if he would cross that way, but was dissuaded in time.

CHRIS COLUMBUS SLEAP

Meantime Slumberous Sleap had discovered the true trail, and following it, came to its end, and here Drakeford took command and trotting up to Sakadong without paper, calmly ignored the fact that the fox had already crossed Sakadong Creek over a dry bottom and gone by a parallel route. At Sakadong itself they struck the true trail, but what to do now since it ran both ways. So some went running heel back to the Wilderness, while Schoch toohooed and coo-hoed the rest over the Bare Bole tree Platform, whence paper went left by a new route to Forth. Here Massey nearly killed Cumming, but the rest didn't care; with the most careless abandon led on by the bold bad Lindsay, they did a fierce gallop for middling tree platform, and here Lin led his devoted admirers on a blind stunt for Dallas' Grave, while the more careful bunch, who kept their optics skinned for paper, did a "Me for Home" stunt past Mackinnon's Bath to Marah, and then to the Slough of Despond, where Tuxy got behind Herlof, and after nearly killing him, did the once over. Exit Tuxy finalissimo!

The rest simply rushed Panama, and Earl B. Rose, J. K. Brand and Happy Herlof cut it out with Dr. Davis and the Welsh Bard for the primary honors. They simply tore for where Pons lay waiting for them, Pons, the aforesaid, deep and still, waiting, always waiting, for its victims!

"Oh Pons! so silent and so deep,
"Ye give us pause,

"Why do ye make us look so cheap,
"Amidst guffaws?"

"Why do ye make the ladies weep,
"As with a wail,
"With hearts like lead, our flesh acreep,
"Our ponies fail?"
"Why sometimes me, and sometimes Sleap?
"Oh Pons, so black and still and deep!"

Well, the first bunch cleared Pons beautifully, so did all the first twenty; then the grief began, and oh, it was awful. Pushing and thrusting, refusing in couples, they rode, they cursed but some never got over. Poor Robby kept howling to the refusees to make room for him, but they kept on refusing, and he with them, so now he curses 'unts and 'untlayers till the cows come home!

Well Earl B. wins the 'unt, light and heavyweight both, and well and richly he deserves them. The official result is herewith:

was perhaps the most brilliant player in Shanghai.

His century breaks are many, and his style was perfect. He invariably was selected to play the visiting professionals and some of his games with John Roberts are memorable to old China hands.

A contemporary of Brooks was Dr. Lazarus, who was the hero of many a match. His fault in being markedly slow and deliberate was the only thing to object to his billiards. Two other players of great note a generation ago were Stokes and Johnson. Those who have had the good fortune to see both these players at their best will no doubt remember the soundness of their game and their brilliant execution.

In the old days in Shanghai, some of the best billiards could be seen at the Mercantile Officers Association and the Engineers Institute, commonly known in those days as the "war office" and "Tinkers Rest" respectively.

"NEW ZEALAND" BROWN

The Soochow Creek Club had a grand player in "New Zealand" Brown, in the late 90's. It was phenomenal that a man who was continually at sea, should drop into the Club and string big breaks consistently with a delicacy of touch and execution that were remarkable.

Around the same period the Engineers had some players who would make any of the present players go all the way. There was old Tom Simpson, Jock Roryson, Holmes, McGavin, and McKechnil, anyone of whom it was a pleasure to watch stringing a big break.

It would be interesting to have readers supply further notes on this subject, regarding other players whom "Blue Chalk" has overlooked on this occasion.

BARTLETT LEADS HARRIERS HOME IN RECORD TIME

With many new faces among the runners the Harriers turned out three packs—fast, medium and slow—for yesterday's chase in the Kiangwan country.

The start was from the American School and the men covered a course of well over seven miles. F. S. Bridges set a hot pace for the slow pack for the first three miles, after which J. E. Fisher took the lead, followed by Tom McKenna, who took the lead in turn at Kiangwan Road. W. W. Bartlett, of the Medium pack, running in championship form, then went ahead, with the speedy Reneman close at his heels. Reneman failed to overtake Bartlett in the final burst for home.

The finish was:
W. W. Bartlett, medium pack, 1st
C. C. Reneman, fast pack, 2nd
T. McKenna, slow pack, 3rd

The winner covered the distance in 53 minutes, 52 seconds, cutting two minutes from the previous best time for this course.

Next Saturday the Harriers will run off a 5-mile road race handicap and a capital entry is expected. The handicap will be framed by Messrs. Bartlett, Reneman and McKenna.

At The Theaters

An exceptional list of programs is to be offered this week at the Apollo theater beginning today with a matinee at 3 o'clock in the afternoon when the screen version of Rex Beach's great story, 'Laughing Bill Hyde' will be shown. The feature of the Apollo bill tonight will be Viola Dana in 'Satan Junior.'

Opening tomorrow at the Apollo a noteworthy offering of a story by Augustus Thomas called "Rio Grande," which is a romantic drama of border life, is to be shown. The feature of the Apollo's week-end bill, beginning Thursday, is a thrilling 'crook play' called "The Exquisite Thief" in which Priscilla Dean appears as star.

An attractive program is announced for today by the Olympic theater and its leading feature is a Douglas Fairbanks picture, "Mr. Fix-it" in which the noted comedian is seen at his best. The bill includes also a Burton Holmes picture called "Down the Danube" and a comedy, "Taming Margaret Center." These features will be shown today at the Olympic, matinee and night.

Billie Burke comes back to Shanghai today in a new picture called "Eve's Daughter," a Paramount attraction featuring tonight's bill at the Victoria theater which includes also a fast moving comedy. At the Victoria matinee this afternoon the picture "Fight for Millions" and the comedy "Hide and Seek Detectives" will be shown.

Seat sales were heavy at Moutrie's yesterday for the three extra performances of the A. D. C. Pantomime "Aladdin" and it is foreseen now that houses for the extra performances will be as packed as they have been at the Lyceum through the past week.

The first of the extra performances will be on Tuesday night, the second at 5 o'clock Thursday afternoon and the third, given by special request, will be on Saturday night.

New episodes of the thrilling serial picture, "The Great Radium Mystery" will be shown at the Isis theater's matinee today. The feature of tonight's bill at the Isis will be the final presentation of "The Eternal Sin" with Florence Reed as star.

Opening tomorrow at the Isis a series of new episodes in "The Great Radium Mystery" will be shown following which a special week-end attraction announced to open on Friday is "The Great Screen Romance."

Among noteworthy coming theatrical offerings will be the appearance for the first time in Shanghai of the Warwick Comedy Company in a repertoire of recent London successes presented by a distinguished cast. The engagement of the Warwick Company is to open at the Lyceum on Wednesday, February 2.

FOOTBALL CLUB BEATS RECS 'B' IN REPLAY GAME

football and seemed always on the ball.

Brandt worked hard but lacked support and did not find himself in a scoring position throughout the game.

We understand that the Recs "B" team was entered for the Skottowe Cup to give the younger members a chance of playing Senior Cup tie football. From their ability to hold up a strong Shanghai Club eleven they seem to like it.

Mr. Boyling refereed the game to the satisfaction of everyone concerned.

MARINE ENGINEERS VS. B.A.T.

The engineers scored their fourth successive victory on Saturday by winning this match by four goals to one.

They had a surprise waiting for their opponents in the shape of two new players just out from Scotland, who know quite a lot about the game.

The B.A.T. started with the wind and a hard and fast game resulted. Both sides were playing robust football and the ground was conducive to a run-away style of game.

The first half hour found the B.A.T. doing most of the pressing and at the end of that time Norris scored for them. Very soon after however a determined effort by the engineers enabled Norris to equalise by a fine shot, and the teams crossed over one all.

In the second half the engineers, plus the wind, outplay-Tobacconists, and they added three more goals, thus winning comfortably 4-1.

SCHOOL VS. ELECTRICS

This game was played at Hongkew Park on Saturday and produced another win for the "Boys"

It was an even struggle and the forward work of the schoolboys decided the issue, they were just about two goal the better team and won by that margin.

The goals were scored by Moosa and Johannson.

CUSTOMS VS. POLICE

This match was played on the widow's Monument ground and resulted in a rather easy win for the Customs by 4-1.

Far East Ideas Are Adopted By Olympic Games

finally the Olympic games, which are held every four years.

Y.M.C.A. physical men are to train teachers all over the world in the "play-for-everybody" idea. These teachers will in turn teach "athletics for the dub" and out of the program which will reach everybody the specialised athlete will be developed and he in turn must survive the annual and biennial games to reach the Olympics.

Mr. Brown is making a survey to determine the basis of Y. M. C. A. staffs for physical work in various parts of the world, the number of Americans and the length of time they are to serve, possibilities for work and definite data as to how best the "Y" may co-operate with the International Olympic Committee in the "play-for-all" program. Organisers and teachers are to be sent from the United States and they will be instructed to reproduce themselves, to train men to take their own positions—and then get out, thus following the model organisation produced in the Far East, a "play-for-all" program and then sectional games.

SEPARATE CHAMPIONSHIPS

Another idea adopted by the International Olympic Committee, of holding separate championships was first tried in the Far Eastern Games. Future Olympic championships will be awarded in each branch of sport. In other words the World Olympic Games are to be a glorified version of the Far Eastern Games.

Mr. Brown was responsible for the first Far Eastern games and when he left Manila after remarkable success as an organiser and executive, he went to France with the Y. M. C. A. His work as director of athletics for the A. E. F. and his organisation of the Inter-Allied Games were followed by his appointment as secretary of physical education of the Y.M.C.A. foreign department, a position which carries with it direction of all "Y" physical work abroad. Mr. Brown was decorated with the Legion of Honor by France, Italy, Rumania and Greece and was citied for the Distinguished Service Medal by the United States Government for his work during the war.

FOOTBALL CLAIMS LIVES OF ELEVEN IN 1920 SEASON

Majority Of Players Killed Were High School Boys; No Collegians

Football exacted a toll of eleven victims during the 1920 season, which closed with Thanksgiving day's games, according to reports to the Associated Press.

The number of deaths was five more than in 1919 and one above the list of two years ago. There were twelve lives lost during the 1917 season; eighteen in 1916, and fifteen in 1915.

The majority of the youths killed this season were high school players. Only two of the dead were members of college aggregations, two on college class teams. One boy, 12 years old, was killed in a game of the "sand lot" variety. Six of the victims were members of the high school elevens.

Defenders of the sport pointed to the fact that not a fatality occurred in the big universities of the country, where the game is conducted under expert physical direction and coaching. The development of the open style of play instead of the smashing game of a dozen years ago, and the improved, heavily padded uniforms and headgears are eliminating much of the danger, according to football experts.
